China retains trade privileges

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has decided to renew trade privileges for China and is considering whether to end their linkage to Beijing's human rights practices, an administration official said Wednesday.

"The question is to what degree do you continue to apply sanctions in pursuit of human rights goals," said the official, speaking only on condition he not be identified.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher was preparing a recommendation for Clinton that would couple renewal of Most Favored Nation trade status with a ban on U.S. imports of Chinese weapons and ammunition.

Not linking trade privileges to human rights would represent a clear retreat from Clinton's position of a year ago when he issued an executive order making progress on human rights the sole condition for renewal of MFN, under which Chinese products enter the United States at the most favorable tariff rates.

Clinton discussed the China issue with Christopher and national security adviser Anthony Lake earlier in the day and asked for more information on the question of using sanctions.

Alternative proposals discussed were creation of a presidential commission to monitor human rights progress in China, pressing the issue in international forums, and asking U.S. companies doing business in China to come up with voluntary standards of conduct.

Clinton was expected to announce his decision today, but that timing was no longer certain.

"The president has been shaping a decision to his satisfaction and he's given some very clear instruction to people and they need to come up with more information," said the senior official.

Christopher had planned to discuss China policy in a speech Friday to the Asia Society but if Clinton's announcement goes beyond Thursday, that speech would be put off.

Group seeks ideas on canyon

The rim committee meets at 7 p.m. tonight at the Obenchain meeting room at 264 Main Ave. S.

An open house will be held from 5:30-9:30 p.m., Thursday, June 2, at the second floor cafeteria in the Taylor building at the College of Southern Idaho.

TWIN FALLS – The city's canyon rim committee is ready to be swayed by public opinion.

An open house will be held next week for the public to help the advisory committee reach a consensus on the future of the Rock Creek and Snake River canyon rims.

Its mission is to determine what land on the rims is suitable for public uses such as trails.

On Wednesday, the committee members walked parts of both rims, including sections near Meander Point, where the two canyons converge west of Twin Falls.

Meander Point resident Rich Stivers told the committee that he would not oppose a trail along the canyon floor by his home. But there is little room for a trail to pass through Stivers's backyard. His home sits near the south rim of the Snake River Canyon.

His living room looks out toward the north wall of the canyon, where water gushes from a crack and a road twists down from the rim to the canyon floor.

"To me, it's much more objectionable to look at that road ... than it is to see homes on the other side of the rim," Stivers said Wednesday.

Where in the world ... did the champ from Montana learn his geography?

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — He knew what country is divided by the Tagus River, where the Tarim Basin is and what is the only non-Islamic country bordering the Caspian Sea.

Anders Knospe, 14, from Bozeman, Mont., walked away with $25,000 Wednesday as his knowledge led to victory in the sixth annual national geography bee.

Portugal, China and Russia, the eighth-grader responded to those three questions. Knospe bested nine other finalists to win the bee, sponsored by the National Geographic Society and Amtrak.

Knospe

Afterward, Knospe admitted he almost got the last question wrong.

"I thought it might be Spain," he said.

In the final round, Knospe went head-to-head with Mi-chael Bebow, 14, of Metairie, La. Both youngsters stumbled when asked to name the river that forms most of the boundary between Nicaragua and Honduras.

"Nicaragua," Knospe wrote.

"San Juan," Bebow scrawled.

The correct answer: the Coco River.

Bebow then guessed that the Tagus divides Italy into two agricultural regions and fell to second place. He received a $15,000 scholarship.

Third place went to Jeorse Lund, 14, of Henderson, Nev. He was ousted when he couldn't come up with the Dutch word for land reclaimed by the sea. (It's "polder.") His prize: a $10,000 scholarship.

Anders wore an ear-to-ear grin and blushed pink when National Geographic Society President Gilbert Grosvenor handed him a giant $25,000 check.

"Tough questions, great competition," Grosvenor said. "I think we've also proved that American education can succeed."

Knospe, who attends Chief Joseph Middle School in Bozeman, Mont., said he was relieved at the end of Wednesday's competition, but practically moaned, "Now I have to go to London. It isn't over yet."

Knospe was referring to National Geographic's international geography bee, which took place last year in London. However, the next international bee will be in Canada in 1995, and participants have not been chosen yet, said geographic society spokeswoman Barbara Moffet.

Defeats put Democrats on defensive

By John King

Analysis

WASHINGTON — The second GOP House victory in three weeks bolsters Republican hopes for major gains in November and suggests trouble for President Clinton and Democrats beyond the traditional midterm blues.

The Republican special election victory Tuesday for a Kentucky House seat that had been in Democratic hands for 129 years again put national Democratic officials on the defensive, arguing that the candidate lost not because of Clinton, but because he ran from Clinton.

"Instead of running on the party's record of fighting for the economic interests of working Americans, Joe Prather ran away from it," said Democratic National Committee Chairman David Wilhelm. "He lost."

Prather did run a lackluster campaign against GOP winner Ron Lewis, and the personal popularity of the late Rep. William Natcher kept the seat in Democratic hands even as the district turned more and more Republican in the past decade.

Nonetheless, there were troublesome messages for Clinton and his fellow Democrats.

After 11-vote loss, Lederer seeks recount

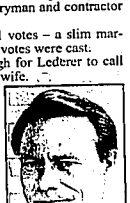

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

GOODING – The Republican primary race for House District 21 seat B isn't over.

When the late ballots from Elmore County were counted Wednesday morning, Shoshone Mayor Tim Ridinger kept his lead over Wendell dairyman and contractor Paul Lederer.

Ridinger won by 11 votes – a slim margin considering 2,979 votes were cast.

Lederer

"Gooding County has new ballots and also because it was so close he's going to have it done," said Sharon Lederer. Her husband was busy Wednesday taking his campaign signs down and recycling them.

But the vote wasn't slim enough for the state to have to pick up the tab for the recount.

Ridinger

Under state law, if a state race is decided by .1 percent or less of the votes, then the state would pay for the recount. But in this race that would mean a margin of three or fewer votes for a free recount. Because this race was decided by 11 votes Lederer will have to pay $100 for each precinct recounted – a total of $3,500.

House District 21 includes precincts in five counties: Blaine County, 15 precincts; Camas County, 2 precincts; Elmore County, 5 precincts; Gooding County, 9 precincts and Lincoln County with 6 precincts.

Thunderstorms, rain, hail hammer wide areas of nation

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms and large hail pelted parts of the Northeast and Midwest on Wednesday, while heavy rain drenched areas of the Rockies and the West.

A cold front over the southern Great Lakes combined with an upper level disturbance in the Mississippi Valley to produce severe thunderstorms across much of the East, including the Ohio and Tennessee valleys.

Walnut-sized hail battered Brunswick, Ohio, and areas near Warsaw, Ind., while hail the size of quarters fell in Gainesboro, Va.

Up to 1 inch of rain fell in just three hours across parts of north-central Ohio. Almost an inch of rain fell in a few hours in Washington, D.C., and thunderstorms rumbled across New York City.

Severe thunderstorm watches were posted for much of the Midwest, mid-Atlantic states and the Northeast. A flash flood watch was issued for parts of north-central and northeast Ohio.

Tornado watches were posted for Wednesday night across parts of New Mexico, much of the Texas and the Oklahoma panhandles. More than half an inch of rain fell in Albuquerque, N.M.

Rostenkowski considers options

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has a take-it-or-leave it offer from U.S. prosecutors that would have him plead guilty to a felony, serve a short prison sentence and end his 36-year congressional career.

Legal sources, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said the decision is now up to the House Ways and Means Committee chairman — who could choose instead to fight criminal charges in what would probably be a lengthy and costly trial.

Asked whether the criminal investigation would be resolved in the next day or so, Rostenkowski said as he left a committee session on health care reform: "I don't have any idea."

Prosecutors have set a Tuesday deadline for Rostenkowski to decide whether to accept the plea bargain.

Negotiations between Rostenkowski attorney Robert S. Bennett and prosecutors have been stalled over language that would describe any offenses by the Illinois Democrat.

The U.S. attorney's office has been investigating Rostenkowski's use of office and campaign accounts, including the possibility that he received money improperly from the House Post Office, hired ghost employees, received sweetheart deals on government-purchased cars and made improper furniture and gift purchases from his official funds.

Wednesday was a day for Rostenkowski to flex his power, as he ran the health care meeting and planned to brief President Clinton on the progress of the legislation.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, asked what a Rostenkowski resignation would mean for the health care bill she pulled together, said, "I certainly hope that doesn't come to pass, but it would be an obstacle that Congress would have to figure out how to overcome."

Recount

County clerks in each of those counties began locking up the ballots late Wednesday when word came of a probable recount.

Under state law, Lederer must ask the state attorney general's office for a recount within 20 days of the Board of Canvassers meeting, which is tentatively scheduled for June 8, said Marilyn Johnson of the election division of the secretary of state's office.

Once he makes that request, Attorney General Larry EchoHawk will instruct all the county clerks in District 21 to impound their ballots. A representative from the attorney general's office and a representative from the secretary of state's office will conduct the recount.

"I was expecting it to be close," Ridinger said on Wednesday. "Paul was a good candidate, we agreed on most of the issues. But I was hoping we could find out the results last night."

The tiny Atlanta precinct in far north Elmore County brought its votes in Wednesday morning to be counted – delaying the election results. Still, Atlanta's six Republican voters didn't decide the race.

Whoever wins will face incumbent Rep. Pattie Nafziger, D-Sun Valley, in the general election in November.

Defensive

up a Democratic seat three weeks ago, the GOP candidates aggressively criticized Clinton's health care plan, especially the employer mandate and government-regulated regional alliances that are the president's gateway to universal coverage.

"These elections are the death knell of Clinton's socialized health care," said Rep. Bill Paxon of New York, chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee, which supports GOP House candidates.

Already, because of Clinton's rocky political standing in the South, Democratic strategists were urging candidates there to show independence from Clinton.

The new election results added considerable volume to that advice — just as Clinton enters a stretch in which he needs some tough votes on health care reform.

Rep. Vic Fazio of California, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee chairman, agreed that local politics would dictate that many Democrats distance themselves from Clinton and the national party from time to time. "Everybody is going to have to determine what the important issues in the district are," Fazio said.

Still, Fazio predicted health care would be an area of broad agreement among Democrats. But others in the party disagreed, saying the two GOP victories would deliver a sober message to Democrats in tough races, particularly in southern and border states.

"I think somebody who is running from one of those districts has got to join with the president on issues like the economy and welfare reform and crime and may well have some differences with him on health care," said Al From, president of the moderate Democratic Leadership Council. "It seems to me that these elections strengthen the hand of moderate and conservative Democrats in health care negotiations."

Looking ahead to November, the two victories give Republicans a head start in a year in which history suggests they will gain 15 to 20 seats. Lewis' victory in Kentucky brought to 178 the number of Republicans in the 435-seat House. There are 256 Democrats and one independent.

"You begin to start thinking perhaps more than 20 now," said Republican National Committee communications director Charles Greener.

One reason for the GOP optimism is that Republicans have done a far better job recruiting candidates than in the past.

Rim

of the city and all of its residents, Chairman Brent Jussel said he is encouraged to receive opinions from owners of private rim land.

"The committee's responsibility is to look at the rim as the public would look at it," Jussel said Wednesday.

He said the committee is faced with tough decisions if the city has any hope for a park along the rim. For example, the committee has to figure out how such a trail could coexist with private homes, he said.

Private rim owner and committee member Earl Williamson said the city would need to focus on selected viewpoints for a park along the rim.

"Nobody's going to say carte blanche, 'We'll let you through here,'" Williamson said while standing on private property at Meander Point.

"This is the most expensive property in the county because it's on the rim," he said. "But when the city fathers came in, they used it as a junkyard."

Williamson lives by the east rim of Rock Creek Canyon just north of where the Rock Creek Park's asphalt trail ends.

He showed committee members other places along Rock Creek Canyon where old tires and concrete slabs still sit years after being dumped.

But retired banker and committee member David Mead showed the committee another site along Rock Creek near Pole Line Road where the creek rushes past wild shrubs and flowers.

"To me, one of the secrets of Twin Falls is the Rock Creek Canyon," Mead said.

Rock Creek Canyon has gone generally unnoticed because of the relative enormity of the Snake River Canyon, he said, even though Rock Creek is more scenic and more valuable for public trails in parts.

The committee was appointed by Twin Falls Mayor Gale Kleinkopf in March to help develop a master plan for the two canyon rims.

Since then, three members have been added to the committee. R. Erick Mikesell of Twin Falls represents the county planning and zoning commission, Marty Sharp is a nonvoting member from the federal Bureau of Land Management, as is Jerome County planner Art Brown.

A 120-day Valentine's Day moratorium was enacted by the City Council to halt rim development until that master plan can be completed. That moratorium is scheduled to end June 14.

Mrs. Clinton says women have most at stake in health reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American health system has neglected women's medical needs for decades and the problems will persist unless Congress votes for universal coverage, Hillary Rodham Clinton said Wednesday.

"There isn't any doubt that women have a greater stake in the health care reform debate than men," she said.

Women are the primary care givers and the medical decision makers in most families, including her own, the first lady told a conference on care giving sponsored by the International Women's Media Foundation.

"As mothers of children, as daughters of aging parents, as wives of spouses, we are the ones who are in the middle, juggling all of the health care decisions, our jobs, our child-rearing and all of our other responsibilities," she said.

"For most of the last decades, women have been more excluded from the health care system than men," she said.

Mrs. Clinton said she thought it was "a very bad joke" when she learned that the first experiments on breast cancer were conducted on men.

Heart researchers concentrated on the problems of men, and diseases such as osteoporosis, breast and ovarian cancer were given low priority, she complained.

AP photo

Hillary Rodham Clinton gives the keynote speech before the International Women's Media Foundation Wednesday.

Until very recently many medical schools "perpetuated faulty stereotypes about women's health," she said.

Medical students once were taught that "women would contact endometriosis if they gave birth after 30," she said. "Symptoms of menopause were discounted as psychosomatic or as evidence of emotional instability.

"Without reform, mothers and daughters, wives and women in general will continue to be given short shrift in our health care system," the first lady said.

She complained that the news media dwelled on conflict instead of explaining the hard choices in health reform.

"It reminds me so often of a very unsatisfying argument in a schoolyard: 'Yes, you did.' 'No, I didn't.' 'Yes, you did.' 'No, I didn't.' And at the end of it, who knows who did or didn't?" said Mrs. Clinton, who chaired the task force that produced the White House's embattled 1,342-page plan.

Asked if she could accept a compromise that required large companies to buy insurance for workers but mandated workers in smaller firms to buy their own, she said, "it would depend upon the level of subsidy we were willing to provide to low-wage workers. ... It is certainly conceivable it could be done in a fair and cost-effective way."

President heads to Capitol Hill to rally lawmakers on health reform

WASHINGTON — President Clinton headed for Capitol Hill on Wednesday in a high-profile push to rally congressional leaders and House Democrats on health reform before lawmakers go home to face voters on Memorial Day.

Clinton and his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, were planning two closed-door sessions Wednesday afternoon — one with Senate and House Democratic leadership and the chairmen of the key committees shaping health reform, and the other with the House Democratic caucus.

In between, they were to walk outside between the Capitol and one of the House office buildings, trailed by dozens of cameras and onlookers.

"I think whenever the president and Mrs. Clinton address the health issue, not only are the American people moved but members of the House and Senate are additionally committed and impressed," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, which is debating a modified version of the Clinton bill.

Clinton's sweeping health proposal has had a hard time on Capitol Hill. Even its most ardent supporters have worked to reframe the bill to make it more palatable to their colleagues. Mandatory alliances are no longer mentioned, for instance, and concessions to small business seem inevitable.

But momentum appears to be building for some sort of health reform bill this year, though its contents are still far from certain.

Kennedy's committee, which started debating a bill last week, has come together across party lines on several key issues. The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., says he and his committee's ranking Republican, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., will begin drafting a bill over the break.

In the House, an Education and Labor subcommittee was on the verge of voting on a bill much like the president's, and two other key committees are working hard to break deadlocks over tough issues like the Clinton bill's requirement that all employers help pay their workers' health insurance.

Survey: Employers cut insurance to 5.4 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 5 million uninsured workers would have health care coverage if not for employer cuts since 1979, the Clinton administration said Wednesday.

A survey distributed by Labor Secretary Robert Reich showed that the portion of American workers who received health care coverage through their jobs declined from nearly two-thirds in 1979 to 61 percent in 1993. Reich said that had coverage levels remained static, 5.4 million workers without coverage today would be insured.

"It was surprising to me," Reich said at a news conference to release the survey findings. "I did not expect this much of a decline."

Release of the survey data coincides with the Clinton administration's uphill battle to push a universal health care plan through Congress.

The figures came from a survey of 30,000 workers taken by the Census Bureau when it conducted the April household employment survey for the Labor Department. The survey was sponsored by the Pension Welfare Benefits Administration, which uses it for statistics on health care, pensions and other worker benefits.

Reich noted that despite the decline, most working people who have insurance get it through their jobs or through their spouse's employer.

"It is still overwhelmingly an employer-based system," he said.

Reich said the survey showed that it was "time for all employers to share this burden" of providing health care coverage. He said the findings make "a very strong case" for Clinton's plan to force businesses to pick up 80 percent of the cost of insurance coverage for their employees.

The survey also could provide ammunition for opponents of Clinton's plan, given that it shows the number of employers who sponsor employee health plans has declined. According to the results, 73 percent of companies with 100 or more workers provided health insurance in 1993, down from 83 percent in 1979. In businesses with fewer than 100 workers, the portion providing coverage declined from 60 percent to 54 percent.

The survey also found:

- Full-time workers were much more likely than part-timers to have coverage available through work. The survey showed 71 percent of full-time workers had access to coverage, down from three-fourths in 1979, while the portion of part-timers covered was 16 percent, the same as in 1979.
- Local, state and federal government workers were much more likely than their private-sector counterparts — 77 percent, compared to 58 percent — to be covered.

Clinton is an uncle

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton is now Uncle Bill.

A baby boy, Tyler Cassidy Clinton, was born May 12 to Molly Martin Clinton, wife of the president's half-brother, Roger.

"Everybody is doing great," White House spokesman Neel Lattimore told The Associated Press today.

Word of the birth didn't get out sooner because "nobody else asked," Lattimore said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A moderate earthquake rattled the Los Angeles area Wednesday morning, another aftershock to the devastating Northridge earthquake in January. There were no immediate reports of injury or damage.

Singer says treatment will stem drug abuse

WASHINGTON (AP) — Country star Larry Gatlin had no songs to sing but a tale of degradation and uplift to tell as he took a congressional committee through his days of his alcohol and drug addiction to treatment and nearly a decade of clean living.

Gatlin, a Grammy Award winner and lead singer of Larry Gatlin and the Gatlin Brothers, told a House Government Operations subcommittee Wednesday that treatment is the key to stemming the nation's drug abuse, saying no amount of interdiction will do the job.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — President Clinton told graduating midshipmen Wednesday that it took decades after D-Day to end the Cold War and that they should not expect quick solutions to the "incredible chaos" marking conflicts in Bosnia and elsewhere.

Previewing themes for his trip to Europe for the 50th anniversary of the invasion of Normandy, Clinton said: "The world wars are over, the Cold War has been won. Now it is our job to win the peace."

Clinton's commencement address at the U.S. Naval Academy was one of a series of defense-related speeches he is giving in advance of an eight-day trip to Europe that begins next Wednesday to commemorate the June 6, 1944, allied invasion.

Clinton called World War II "an era of sacrifice almost unequalled" and told the military leaders of the future: "The question which hangs over your head is the question of what your generation will accomplish, as the generation of World War II accomplished so much."

"For the first time in history, we have the chance to expand the reach of democracy and economic progress across the whole of Europe and to the far reaches of the world," he told the class of 868 Navy and Marine midshipmen.

The assignment is a delicate one for Clinton, who is still mistrusted by some in the military for his avoidance of military service during the Vietnam War and his participation in anti-war demonstrations in Europe.

But Clinton sought to reinforce his credentials as commander-in-chief with tough rhetoric, saying to applause that U.S. armed forces were the best equipped and best motivated in the world. "And as long as I am president, that will continue to be the truth," he vowed.

Clinton also said he would resist any cuts in defense spending beyond those already made.

Clinton promised to work with other nations where possible "to be on the way to managing some of this incredible chaos that has threatened to engulf the world in which you will raise your children."

On a muggy day under hazy skies, Clinton was honored with a 21-gun salute at the Navy-Marine Corps Memorial Stadium while six Navy Blue Angels roared in close formation overhead.

A midshipman is overjoyed at recieving his diploma from President Clinton at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Wednesday.

In keeping with recent precedent, Clinton shook every hand in the graduating class. And, in keeping with an older tradition, the president granted "amnesty" to all midshipmen who had received demerits — but he emphasized it only covered "minor conduct offenses."

He pointedly mentioned the Navy's Tailhook sexual harassment scandal and a cheating scandal at the Naval Academy that led to the expulsion of 24 midshipmen.

"These are troubling events, to be sure, because our military rests on honor and leadership," he said.

Still, he added, "the test of leadership is not constant flawlessness. ... You have my confidence. You have America's confidence."

The president had harsh words for critics of his Bosnia policy.

He said the United States has a clear national interest in making sure that the conflict in the former Yugoslavia does not spread to other parts of Europe and in helping to "stop the slaughter of innocents."

But he cautioned that the United States cannot settle all of "the many ethnic and religious conflicts that have erupted in our era."

He attacked those in Congress pressing legislation to defy a U.N. arms embargo and to sell arms to Bosnian Muslims to help them defend themselves against Serbs.

Clinton said the idea sounded "simple and painless and good but ... will not work" and would infuriate allies. "This is one of those conflicts that can only end at the negotiating table, not on the battlefield."

"Our administration will not walk away from this Bosnian conflict. But we will not embrace solutions that are wrong," he said.

The Senate this month passed a bill that would require Clinton to lift the arms embargo unilaterally, but it was weakened by a conflicting provision that told him to consult with NATO allies before taking any such action.

Advocates of forcing Clinton to lift the ban tried to get a House vote on Tuesday, but leaders posponed it for two weeks — until after Clinton returns from his D-Day trip.

NAFTA opponents endorse GATT

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, who opposed the North American Free Trade agreement, endorsed ratification of the GATT world trade agreement Wednesday, saying it will raise America's living standard.

Gephardt, D-Mo., was joined at a Capitol news conference by six other House Democrats who also voted against NAFTA when it was approved last year.

Gephardt said he hopes for congressional ratification this year of the pact, negotiated under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, but it will make little difference if it is delayed until 1995.

"We ought to do it when we're ready to do it," he said.

Joining Gephardt in endorsing the pact were Reps. Sander Levin of Michigan, Louise Slaughter of New York, Robert Torricelli of New Jersey, Jane Harman of California, and Barbara Kennelly and Sam Gejdenson, both of Connecticut.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor, meanwhile, said Gephardt's endorsement was a sign that Congress will pass the agreement.

Kantor said he was optimistic that Congress would ratify the pact by August.

Agency warns health workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government warned medical and dental workers Wednesday that they could be in danger from a common anesthesia.

To protect workers from long-term exposure to nitrous oxide, commonly called laughing gas, operating rooms are equipped with ventilation systems. Such systems can reduce nitrous oxide concentrations by more than 70 percent.

But the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, in a special health warning issued Wednesday, said employers aren't maintaining the systems properly. The agency found some hospital workers exposed to 12 times the safe limit and some dental workers exposed to 40 times the safe limit, the agency said.

Bill combines interstates, other roads

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's interstate highways would be combined with thousands of miles of secondary roads in a new National Highway System under legislation passed Wednesday by the House.

In a 412-12 vote, the House approved a measure that would finance improvements to 159,000 miles of highway, three-quarters of which are outside the interstate system.

"What this represents is a first step toward viewing what could be termed the crown jewel of America's roads, highways and bridges within the context of a surface transportation system," said Rep. Nick J. Rahall II, D-W.Va., chairman of the House Public Works surface transportation subcommittee.

Roads under the bill would be eligible for $3.6 billion per year in federal aid from the national highway trust fund. In addition to the entire 45,000-mile interstate system, the new designation also covers 114,000 miles of state highways, airport connectors and other key roads linked to ports, military bases, transportation facilities and border crossings.

These roads represent only 4 percent of the nation's 3.9 million miles of public roads but carry more than half the road-borne commerce and long-distance travel, according to Rahall.

Smithsonian has new chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in its 148-year history, the Smithsonian Institution chose a non-scientist as its chief executive officer Wednesday.

It named former university chancellor Ira Michael Heyman, a lawyer, to the post of secretary.

The vote of the Smithsonian's 17-member board of regents "finally was unanimous," said Barber Conable, head of the search committee. He declined to name competing finalists but a Smithsonian employee said Thomas Lovejoy, assistant secretary of the institution, had supporters.

Winners, losers and lessons from Tuesday's election

With 1,596 votes (54 percent), Jones won a clear victory in the District 22B Republican primary. But challenger Sue Burwell came within 250 votes, despite running a cream-puff campaign.

Burwell ran on the strength of her personality and character, rarely taking public stands on issues and failing to capitalize on Jones' weaknesses. Jones might not have survived a more aggressive challenge – especially one that focused on his big-spending approach to education funding.

Between now and 1996, Jones needs to tend to his constituency. If he doesn't, he can expect another challenge.

The big winner in the Republican primary for lieutenant governor was Democratic state Sen. John Peavey of Carey, who now goes into the November race against a weakened incumbent. While Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter commanded only 40 percent of the vote in the GOP's three-way primary, Peavey coasted through an uncontested Democratic primary.

Larry EchoHawk is similarly well-positioned for November. EchoHawk pulled in a convincing 74 percent of the vote in a primary race against two weak opponents.

But his Republican opponent, Phil Batt, did better than Otter. Batt's 48 percent victory in a four-way GOP race is a respectable springboard toward November.

Cassia County's ouster of two incumbents demonstrates local voters' dissatisfaction with the status quo – and especially the handling of financing for the new county hospital.

Politicians often talk about the need to "run government like a business." That's partly true. But government isn't a private business – it's the public's business. It shouldn't be handled behind the public's back, as the hospital issue apparently was.

Commissioner Weldon Beck, one of those deposed Tuesday, has served 12 terms. We're sure Cassia County residents feel respect, affection and gratitude toward him. Even so, voters clearly want a change in how the county operates.

"Three strikes and you're out" should be the rule for Twin Falls County's Sunday liquor by the drink issue.

Bar and restaurant owners have tried three times since 1986 to repeal the ban on Sunday cocktail sales. Three times the county commissioners have referred the question to voters on advisory ballots. Tuesday was the third decisive defeat for the proposal.

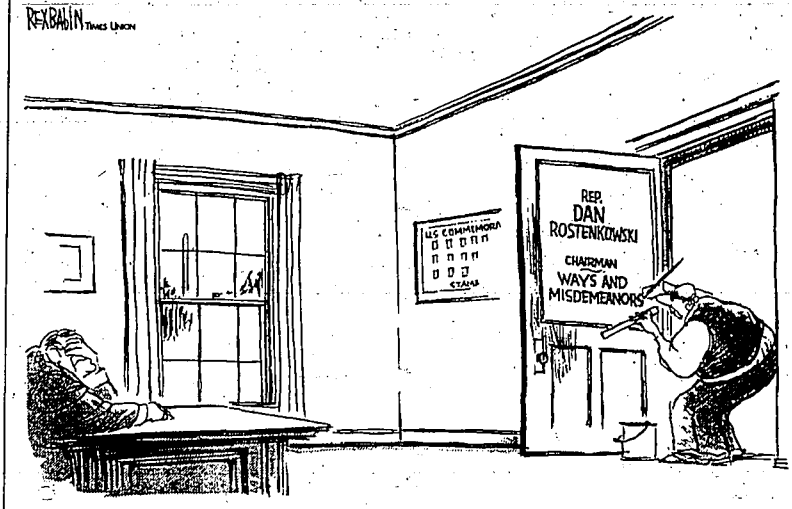

Despite this clear message from voters, at least one of the proposal's backers has said he may ask county commissioners to repeal the ban anyway. The commissioners have that authority, but granting such a request would be arrogant.

The barkeeps and restaurateurs should give up and graciously drop the issue for good.

Look into your child's school

We are swiftly heading toward the end of school, but I have a few questions.

First, do you send your children out to play in the rain? If not, are you aware that your children are sent out in the rain to play for recess and at lunch time?

Also, the city insisted that the school system pay to have Madrona paved from Stadium to Filer, yet we all hear that the schools need money. Does this make sense?

Plus, there are two crossing guards on the Sawtooth corner of the aforementioned intersection. They walk the kids from that corner to the northeast corner and to the southwest corner. But the kids are on their own from the northeast corner to the southeast corner and from the southwest corner to the southeast corner. Does this make sense?

Just one more thing and I'll go my way. To those of you who put your car stereos on blast, thank you for wanting to share, but please believe me there will come a time when you'll wish you had protected your hearing and your radio speakers. Haven't you noticed how many people want you to repeat? We were generous with our noise too, and now we have trouble hearing the words and sounds that are so precious to us.

Be good to yourselves and each other.

Read Craig's proposal

I would like to let people know of some information that I found out about due to a response from a recent letter I wrote to the editor.

I acquired the information from material received from Sen. Larry Craig's office in Twin Falls. This information is from a proposal by Handgun Control Inc. I would like to encourage anyone, whether you are for or are against gun control, to go to Sen. Craig's office and get a copy of this proposal.

I would like to give you a small quote from this proposal:

V. Possible uses for the revenue: (B) A well-funded and concerted campaign to add credence to the call for eliminating the Second Amendment entirely via constitutional amendment. (C) Provide a revenue source for the cost of enforcement of the new laws by federal and state law enforcement officials.

Now I don't know if this proposal has been revised or not; I don't think that it matters. The point is, that in black and white, it shows what a percentage of people literally want done.

In closing, I just ask people to remember that it is much easier to give away any freedom than it is to get a freedom back.

Halleran wants to go too far

So, Charlie Halleran of Jerome advocates the installation and use of whipping posts in front of Twin Falls schools? Hey, Charlie, while you're at it, why not insist on some stocks (you know, like the ones used to punish people during the Puritan period, complete with holes for the head, hands and feet)? We could put them and the dunking stool right in front of city hall.

And why stop at Twin Falls? Why not extend the same humiliation to Jerome kids and adults? And to add more "zap" to the punishment, perhaps some grocery stores could donate the apples, tomatoes and eggs to throw at the "dredges of society."

Actually, I hope Mr. Halleran's recent letters are done in some form of sarcasm. I hope that people today do not really believe that barbaric abuse, such as tearing the flesh with a wet rattan stick, is an answer to the ills in our society.

Perhaps I am just an idealist, but I believe humanity will prevail with goodness, respect and lawfulness once we all realize we must teach and live the universal laws of love. Punishment is a form of ruling by fear. We have had thousands of years to prove that doesn't work.

Fear only motivates folks so long as they are afraid of being "seen" or "caught." Fear is a negative motivator. Teaching respect through love, on the other hand, instills a long-lasting effect in a person to want and desire to "harm no one." What is happening in America today is the absence of teaching our children to love and respect others and the property of others. If our kids notice we speed just a little because we're late for church, or if they notice when we don't give the clerk money back when we are given too much change, what example are we setting for our kids?

I do not believe human beings are inherently evil and must be constantly threatened with the fear of punishment to keep us in line. But we all must be taught the blessings if peace and beauty that can be ours by choosing the more noble and high road. And one way to start is by setting an example that material rewards are not better than spiritual blessings. We must start teaching the hopes of love, not the lie that "he who dies with the most toys wins."

Congratulations to SDSU

Congratulations to San Diego State for choosing one of the best coaches in junior college history to head its basketball program. Fred Trenkle is not only an exceptional coach, but an outstanding person as well.

Eighteen months ago, my wife and I had a premature baby that required us to stay at St. Luke's in Boise for six weeks. Those were hard days, and because of the suddenness of our problems, we had not adequately prepared our home for a baby.

Although we were barely acquainted with the Trenkles, Fred helped organize a group that fixed, painted and prepared a baby room that was ready for our 3½ pound infant upon our return. It was a great gift to us, which we will always remember the Trenkles for.

Daniel Mills, get a life!

To Daniel Mills:

First of all, we all have enough medical bills of our own, let alone having to pay yours out of our taxes. It is bad enough that we taxpayers have to pay for damage you cause and for your food and shelter.

Do you think you can do something illegal and just get a slap on the hand? If I was that cop, I would have arrested you regardless of your age or crime. I make mistakes too, but I am quite aware of what is legal and illegal. And I'm sure you're quite aware too; you just chose to make those mistakes and with those or any type of mistake comes consequences. So why do you go complaining about how horrible it is, when your actions are what put you there? And what you did must have not been that small to get the jail time you did or it certainly wasn't your first offense.

I think it's great you're in jail instead of out on the street doing it again. I feel bonds and community service are just an easy scapegoat for you people. You need jail time. Maybe next time, you'll think twice or there may not be bonds or jail for you. You're 18, you'll go to prison and, let me tell you, there won't be a nurse there to run to when your tummy hurts.

Agrees with Jane Anderson

I agree with Jane Anderson's letter to the editor on May 19 in which she lauds the Kimberly community as a great place to live and commends the local authorities that helped in the drug bust involving the owner of Person's IGA. However, I was disappointed to read that those of us, who continue to support the IGA grocery store in Kimberly are too lazy to go to Twin Falls to shop and are condoning criminal actions by the owner.

Kimberly is a small community made up of many fine people, some of whom work at the IGA. The manager, Dale Ford, helps our Kimberly schools, churches and 4-H groups. Person's IGA provides groceries at low cost to local church functions (even taking back what wasn't used) and is donating freezer space, trays, shrink wrap and the use of the shrink wrap machine to the Math Club at our high school. Our local Kimberly Youth Association has been working feverishly to get our new baseball diamonds up. Dale has donated, for three weeks in a row, hot dogs, buns and chips for all the workers – not to mention the space he allows local organizations to set up to sell raffle tickets, baked goods, etc.

Most of the garden plants on sale outside the store were purchased from our high school Future Farmers of America program. Our Kimberly Middle School's track meet has been sponsored entirely by our local IGA store for the last three years. Do you think the Twin Falls stores will line up to do the same?

What about the good people that are employed, locally, at the IGA? The owner of this store has been arrested, he hasn't even been convicted yet. Why jeopardize a neighbor's job because one man made bad choices? He will get his punishment through the justice system, and I hope our Kimberly community will rally around those that are left behind working and living in Kimberly.

Movie review was wrong

On May 20, I read the review in The Times-News of the film, "When a Man Loves a Woman." Having been associated both professionally and personally with the disease of alcoholism for more years than I care to record, I went to see the film.

Whoever wrote the review has obviously never lived intimately with a problem drinker. I would like to suggest that anybody who has any connection with such a problem, or indeed has a drinking problem, should try to see this outstanding film.

Harms clouds building issue

With all due respect to Mr. Harms, I believe that his letter published on May 18 in your paper clouds the issue related to future building plans in the Wendell School District. The issue is not whether or not new administrative offices are needed; they are. The issue is not whether or not the newer wing would make a fine library; it would. The real issue is whether or not four very serviceable classrooms should be given up for administrative offices and a library. I would hope debate would center on that issue, and I appreciate the fact that the board has tabled the matter to allow more time so that the best decisions can be made on behalf of Wendell's children.

I also would like to suggest that as we assess the quality of the administrative team in Wendell, we do not base our judgment on where people live but on the quality of service they provide. As a parent with a student under each principal, I have been pleased with the solid leadership they are providing.

Thank you City of Twin Falls

I just wanted to take a moment to thank the city of Twin Falls for its efforts on "Take-Pride-in-Twin-Falls-Day."

Sherry Jeff and Lauren Gillespie deserve praise for the time and hard work they contributed on May 14. Thanks should also go to PSI Waste Systems and Cain's Service Center.

It's too bad our county commissioners couldn't have spared some of their previous time for this project also. If they would have, maybe they would have seen the pickups lined around the block, waiting in line for 45 minutes just to dump a load of tree branches, tires or old appliances. Or maybe they would have seen the mountains of trash that accumulated in just four hours' time.

Maybe if they could have seen this, they would try a little harder to solve this very large waste problem they have created.

Thanks again Sherry and the city of Twin Falls.

Quayle: Separates 'us' and 'them'

Molly Ivins

There is no shortage of symptoms that Things Are Going to Hell, so it's a bit like bringing heat to Houston to point out one more. Still, this is such a vacuous little quirk, I'm distressed by it.

Two political books have come out this spring, and the mediocre one is doing quite well while the superb one is getting little attention. Not an unusual tale in publishing, but still worth decrying, methinks.

On display everywhere, with a first printing of 750,000, on the best-seller lists, is Dan Quayle's woodenly written, self-justifying compendium of twaddle called "Standing Firm." Even the little touches of malice aren't what they're cracked up to be. Everyone's to blame but Quayle for all his problems.

While Quayle was veep, I was often asked if the press wasn't treating him unfairly. I said I'd be inclined to agree, except that I'd covered him during the '88 campaign and found him dumber than advertised. I privately thought he was dumb to a point that was alarming.

Now Quayle informs us that wasn't him in '88 – he knows he was awful, but his handlers made him do it. I'm sorry, but there was no way to know that at the time. And that first impression did stick.

On the strength of this book, I'd say Quayle isn't as dumb as advertised, and he has a legitimate grievance, having been publicly ridiculed as a borderline moron for years. What doesn't change is one's sense of his limitations. As Peter De Vries once observed of a character, "Deep down, he's shallow."

Quayle is the quintessential suburbanite whose world is divided into "us" – who play golf at the country club, vote Republican, love our families, go to church and are mighty white – and "them" – who by implication not only don't believe in God or love their families but who he actually claims "treat people worse" than conservatives.

Quayle quotes as unfair what seems to me a genuinely perceptive description of him by George Will: "that the conservatism I'd demonstrated was less a creed than an absorbed climate of opinion, absorbed in a golf cart." I suspect you'll wind up agreeing with Will if you read this book.

The most amazing part is Quayle's heated defense of his service in the National Guard on the grounds that he wasn't given any special treatment to get in; he shows not the faintest awareness that the entire war was fought on a class basis.

The book does contain a few giggles; my favorite is the description of "Lee Kuan Yew, an impressive public figure, a true geopolitical thinker." That's Lee Kuan Yew, the dictator of Singapore.

Quayle's book is in astonishing contrast to Madeleine Kunin's memoir, "Living a Political Life." Kunin served in the Legislature and then as lieutenant governor and then governor of Vermont for six years before bowing out. Her book is infinitely more reflective than Quayle's, both about government and political life, and also stands in striking contrast to Quayle's placid, imputable good opinion of himself.

If you want to study how much difference being an economically comfortable white male makes in the American psyche, compare these two books. Kunin suffered agonies of self-doubt, constantly questioned herself as to whether she was doing the right thing and dealt constantly with the challenge of being female in a male world.

While Quayle was veep, I was often asked if the press wasn't treating him unfairly. I said I'd be inclined to agree, except that I'd covered him during the '88 campaign and found him dumber than advertised.

"It was shocking to me to see how susceptible I continued to be to that most chronic symptom of female insecurity: feeling like a fraud," writes the woman who was three times elected to the highest office in her state. She writes beautifully about the seductive nature of power, the struggle to keep her sense of self and of others free from the effects of power.

Compared with Kunin, Quayle still looks like a shallow frat boy. This is the first book written by an American woman who has succeeded in politics, and its searing honesty sets an extraordinarily high standard for the new genre. I'd also recommend it to anyone who has ever considered running for office at any level. It's as realistic an account of the troubles and rewards as I've ever come across.

If not environmentalist, coverage is less to none

I could hardly believe my eyes. The Times-News' May 15 coverage of 7,000 men meeting in our capital was given a few inches on Page 9. If they had been 70 environmentalists, we would have been greeted with half-page pictures.

Do you know what those 7,000 men were there for? To encourage and be encouraged to be responsible leaders of the family. How dangerous! It is generally accepted that the breakdown of the family is the major cause of increased crime, lower moral standards and sexual diseases. These men at Promise Keepers are simply trying to do their part in maintaining the high ground.

This is evidently perceived to be a threat to the Associated Press and The Times-News. Although the news item was tiny, they managed to squeeze in a paragraph saying it was ironic that some of those men had signed a petition to put the special gay-rights issue on the ballot. I don't find it ironic at all that a group of family men are for letting the voters, rather than the college administration (as it does presently), decide whether children should be taught behavior which is proven destructive. This isn't anti-love for fellow man. It's protective of mankind.

While the news gatherers fiddle the same old tune of Christian/Mormon-bashing, Rome is burning.

Clinton's statements contradict his actions

Re: Photo of Clinton and Edward Kennedy with headline, "Clinton calls for higher morals" which appeared in the May 15 issue of The Times-News:

- Is there a more ludicrous and insulting statement, "Clinton calls for higher morals?" This coming from a president who is being sued for sexual harassment and a senator who left a girl to drown while he went home to sleep? The same senator who sponsored the banning of anti-abortion activities.

Military property should be returned to people

What do you think about elections? You know now who is for giving away Idaho to the Air Force. If you travel from Quartzsite to Yuma, Ariz., you'll see signs on both sides of Highway 93 reading "Keep Off. Government Property." It is Army land. Point – you'll never set foot or recreate on it. Be real. It's gone forever. This is your last chance.

Symms' pension of $10,000 a month amounts to $333.33 a day. You don't need this. The governor says, "We need the money." Armies do not produce money, they take money out of taxpayers that could be used for good roads, schools and clean drinking water.

Board votes 3-0 to deny Ray parole 25 years after King killing

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — James Earl Ray lost his bid for parole Wednesday as the Parole Board brushed aside claims that he didn't kill Martin Luther King Jr. and that he was pressured into pleading guilty.

At his first parole hearing in 25 years, Ray claimed his lawyer convinced him he'd already been convicted by the news media, and that pleading guilty in return for 99 years was better than risking a trial and possible death sentence.

"First, I didn't kill Dr. King," Ray said: "I wasn't involved in any type of collusive activity," Ray said.

King was shot April 4, 1968, as he stood on a motel balcony in Memphis, where he had come to support a strike by sanitation workers.

"You had a choice," said Parole Board member Rose Hill said of the plea.

"I did not have a choice," the 66-year-old Ray said.

The vote was 3-0 against parole. Ray needed four votes. One of the seven board members investigated King's assassination and disqualified himself. The remaining three decided not to vote when it became clear Ray had lost his bid.

Ray's next parole hearing will be in July 1999. Two who voted today said they would favor granting parole then.

"That is full service for the crime you committed," board chairman Charles Traughber said.

The parole hearing was separate from Ray's legal efforts to win a trial in Memphis, where a judge last week gave permission to test-fire the rifle believed used in King's assassination. Previous ballistics tests were ruled inconclusive because the fatal slug was too badly damaged to make comparisons.

Today's hearing was administrative rather than judicial and dealt with Ray's record as a prisoner.

Tough Biak battle ends in stalemate

Knight-Ridder News Service

The airfields captured at Wakde, Dutch New Guinea, were adequate for fighters and medium bombers, but they were not capable of operating heavy bomber formations.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur had promised Adm. Chester Nimitz land-based air support for the June, 1944, assault on the Marianas. The large island of Biak, in the Shouten island group off the northwest tip of New Guinea, about 300 miles west of Hollandia, thus became the next target for Lt. Gen. Walter Krueger's fast-moving if thinly spread 6th Army.

The U.S. at War — Events of World War II 1941-1945

The principal town on Biak was Bosnek, from which a 7-mile road followed the coast to the Japanese airstrips near the village of Mokmer. A group of high, steep coral cliffs also ran along the road about 100 yards inland and also bordered the airstrips.

In these cliffs the Japanese had built bunkers and emplaced heavy weapons. Headquarters and supply dumps were located in deep caves ringed with pillboxes. The garrison of more than 11,000 men were from mainly first-class regular army regiments.

MacArthur's intelligence chief, Maj. Gen. Charles Willoughby, had badly underestimated the strength of the defenders at less than 4,500. Thus, Krueger planned to take Biak using only the understrength 41st Infantry Division (whose 163rd Infantry Regiment was at Wakde), a force only slightly larger than what the Japanese had.

The 41st division's 162nd and 186th Infantry Regiments landed on Biak on May 27, 1944. Meeting no resistance at the beach, they advanced rapidly up the road. Not until the lead unit, the 3rd Battalion, 162nd Regiment was within 200 yards of Mokmer did the Japanese open fire with automatic weapons and artillery from the hills. They also counterattacked on the ground. The 162nd was forced back.

The next day, the Japanese surprised the Americans with a tank attack. However, the enemy light tanks were no match for the U.S. M4 Sherman tanks.

The Japanese had lagged far behind the other major powers in tank development. Having had to fight only the Chinese, who had no tanks at all, the Japanese armor had been adequate. There had been no competitive pressure to build heavier tanks like those that had evolved in Europe. But at Biak, the 37mm guns of the Japanese tanks merely bounced off the armor of the Shermans while the 75mm guns of the American tanks blew the enemy vehicles apart.

Still, the Japanese attack was strong, and one isolated U.S. battalion had to be evacuated by sea during the night. The 41st Division then brought up its artillery and with air support pushed the Japanese back and took one of the airstrips. However, it could not be used because it was still under fire from the hills.

The battle settled into a stalemate. The Americans lacked the strength to root the enemy out of their fortifications and the Japanese could not throw the Americans off the island.

Tokyo did consider a strategic counteroffensive at Biak. The crack 2nd Amphibious Brigade assembled at Mindanao in the Philippines for a run to Biak with a strong escort, including the superbattleships Yamato and Musashi. But Tokyo hesitated.

When the American drive into the Marianas began in June, Tokyo opted instead for a decisive naval confrontation in the Central Pacific.

Schwarzkopf has surgery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, who headed U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf War, underwent surgery for prostate cancer Wednesday at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

"All indications are that the cancer was discovered in its early stages and the prospects are for a full recovery," the hospital said in a statement.

Dr. David McLeod, chief of urology at Walter Reed, said Schwarzkopf is in excellent physical condition and should recover fully in a matter of weeks.

Packer pleads innocent to depositing paycheck

GREEN BAY, Wis. — A former Green Bay Packers practice roster member accused of depositing a former teammate's $24,723 paycheck into his own account has pleaded innocent.

An arrest warrant had been issued Tuesday morning for Jason McGill, 22, of Atlanta after he did not appear in Brown County Circuit Court as scheduled on the charge of passing forged documents.

The warrant was cancelled after he arrived Tuesday afternoon and entered the plea.

His trial was scheduled for June 29.

Red Sox's Dawson schedules arthroscopic knee surgery

BOSTON — Andre Dawson, who has had nine knee operations, is scheduled to undergo arthroscopic surgery on his left knee which "locked" up while while he was running out a grounder.

Dawson, 39, will undergo the procedure by Dr. Arthur Pappas, Red Sox physician, Thursday at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester. Pappas said Wednesday it was not clear when Dawson would return.

Dawson missed 18 games last May after having arthroscopic surgery on his right knee, and Pappas said the injury to the left knee Tuesday night was similar to last year's problem.

Dawson was hitting .246 with 10 homers and 27 RBIs in 39 games this season. On Sunday, he collected his 999th career extra-base hit and his 422nd home run.

Officers probe gun threat allegation in Kidd accident

OAKLAND, Calif. — Officers investigating an auto accident involving basketball star Jason Kidd are looking into a report that a passenger in Kidd's vehicle pointed a gun at another motorist.

The accident occurred early Sunday, but the gun allegation did not surface until The Oakland Tribune reported Tuesday that a motorist claimed one of the passengers in Kidd's Toyota Landcruiser had pointed the weapon at him at a traffic light before the crash.

His agent, Aaron Goodwin, says there was no gun and there is "not one ounce of truth," in the motorist's story.

Watson, Gilkey, Destrade suspended for Sunday brawl

NEW YORK— St. Louis teammates Allen Watson and Bernard Gilkey and Florida's Orestes Destrade were suspended Wednesday by the National League for participating in a bench-clearing brawl.

Watson was suspended for eight games for intentionally hitting Destrade with a pitch and then throwing his glove at Destrade after he charged the mound Sunday during a game in Miami won by the Cardinals 10-9. Watson hit Destrade in the back after giving up three homers in the second inning.

Destrade was suspended for four games for charging the mound and hitting Watson. Gilkey was suspended for four games for making contact with an umpire.

Latham Invite tees off this weekend

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The $40,000 Latham Motor Match Play Invitational, the largest match play tournament in the state, has its fifth annual run at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course this weekend.

The tourney, which offers two major social events plus numerous sidelight competitions, begins with a practice round and putting and driving contests at 5 p.m. Friday. That will be followed by a barbecue for all participants at 6 p.m., plus a raffle in which over $3,000 in merchandise will be distributed.

The tournament proper, which has attracted 228 players, will have its first round Saturday, championship and loser bracket semifinals Sunday with the survivors playing 36 holes in semifinals and finals Monday.

As usual, the windup will be the awards banquet at the Turf Club, beginning at 6:30 p.m. Monday.

The growth of the tournament has been somewhat of a surprise even to its sponsor, Bob Latham.

"Yes, it will be even a little bigger this year," said the man who underwrote last year's finals to over $25,000. "McDonald Insurance is participating in the new car for the first hole-in-one and other sponsors (Mike's Pro Shop, Universal Underwriters and Sign Design) are providing closest to the pin contests for all flights each day. I'm sure the total tab will run well in excess of $40,000."

At registration, contestants receive a golf shirt and hat, which repays most of the $80 entry fee.

"We can guarantee every player two rounds," Latham said. "It would be nice for each to have the opportunity to play Monday but the logistics and numbers just don't allow it."

Both defending champions — and most of the former champions — are back for this one.

Tracy Frank, Burley, won the men's title last year while the women's prize went to Kylie Peterson of Jerome.

Mickey Dugger of Elko, Joe Malay of Weiser and Brett Rupert of Boise are former champions. The women's prizes have been divided between RoseMary McRoberts and Virginia Undhjem until Peterson broke the chain last year.

Host Professional Mike Hamblin noted the women's championship flight has been limited to eight players.

"The disparity in handicaps made it impossible to have a full 16-woman field," he said.

"We're pleased to see some young women coming into the championship flight again," said Hamblin. "It's been a while since the Vegwerts, Browns and others provided some variety. But Undhjem and McRoberts have been great veterans and representatives of Magic Valley golf."

The bright, new face in the men's championship flight is Kimberly's Preston Hafer, who tied the Burley Muny course record with a 61 two weeks ago and added a 66 in helping Kimberly to a third-straight runner-up finish in the state Class B prep tourney.

Frank has picked up some laurels already this year, combining with Kevin Packard to win the state fourball title last week. Nils Badenduck, Sun Valley, won the 1994 Buhl Amateur. The major out-of-towner is Tandy Kaluia who came from Hawaii for the meet.

"It's the kind of tournament you don't want to miss," said Malay, a former state champion. "Everything is first class in this one and even if you lose two straight matches, who still come out a winner."

Rockets wrestle with 2nd win, 104-99

HOUSTON (AP) — If there was one overriding reason why Hakeem Olajuwon won the Most Valuable Player award, it was because he carried a team with no other stars.

Case in point: Wednesday night, Game 2 of the Western Conference final.

Olajuwon, who received his MVP award before the game, had 41 points, 13 rebounds and six assists to lead the Houston Rockets to a 104-99 victory over the Utah Jazz, who played much better than they did in the series opener and kept it close until the final 30 seconds.

Olajuwon scored 12 of Houston's final 19 points, made all 13 of his free throws and 14 of 22 attempts from the field to lead Houston to a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 series.

Game 3 is Friday night at Salt Lake City.

"I think we feel the energy at home and we're playing with so much confidence," Olajuwon said. "Now we put the pressure on Utah to win at home."

Olajuwon's play was especially important because the Rockets didn't get much scoring from their other starters. Mario Elie came of the bench to score 17 points, including a 3-pointer with 1:55 left that gave the Rockets the lead for good.

The Rockets clearly made the most of their foul shots, hitting 32 of 34 foul shots.

For Houston, Vernon Maxwell finished with 14 points and Kenny Smith added 10. Utah's Karl Malone rebounded from a below-par Game 1 and scored 32 points, but his six missed free throws in 18 attempts turned out to be especially costly.

The game had 15 ties and 21 lead changes, and it came down to the final 90 seconds with Houston leading 96-95. Olajuwon drew Spencer's fifth foul with 1:20 left and made both foul shots, making it 98-95.

With the shot clock about to expire, Stockton hit a running 12-footer to draw Utah within one, but again Olajuwon bailed out the Rockets. This time, he hit a straight-away banker from seven feet while falling.

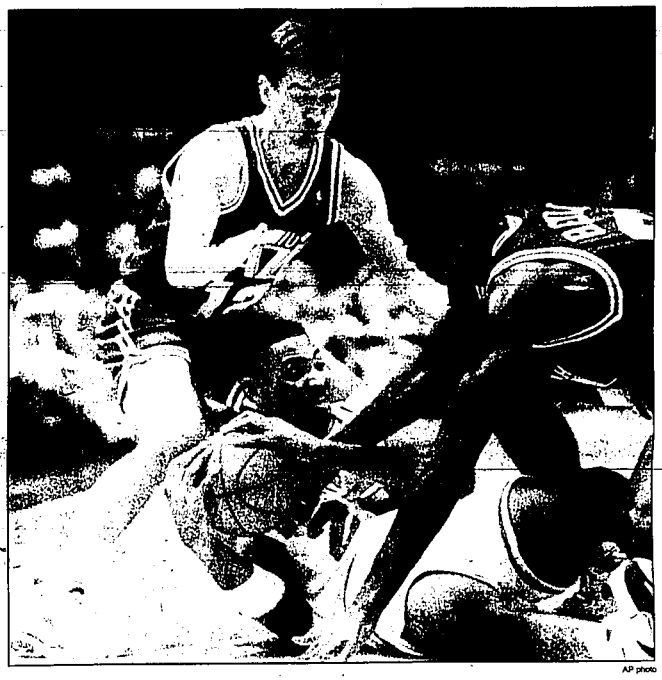

Tyrone Corbin shot an airball for Utah, and Maxwell was fouled on the rebound and made two foul shots with 26 seconds left to make to 102-97. Malone missed a 3-pointer with 20 seconds left, Smith was fouled on the rebound and made two shots to end the scoring.

Stockton had 18 points and 10 assists and Jay Humphries added 11 points for Utah, which was 28 of 37 from the line. Houston outrebounded Utah 42-23 and had eight 3-pointers to Utah's three.

Malone almost single-handed kept Utah in the game in the third quarter, scoring 10 points in a period that ended with the Jazz trailing by just four, 73-69. Stockton had five assists in the quarter, but no player other than Malone made more than one basket.

Despite big advantages in rebounding and 3-point shooting, the Rockets held only a 48-46 lead at halftime.

What kept Utah close was its ability to draw fouls and its ability to prevent Houston from making an extended run. The Jazz led by seven early, and when they slumped they still didn't allow Houston to go ahead by more than five.

In fact, ever since the announcement that the Minnesota Timberwolves were moving downriver, people have been suggesting new names.

Mayor Marc Morial suggested the Rhythm.

"They can take our Jazz, but they'll never take our Rhythm away from us," he said.

On Bourbon Street suggestions ran from the Strippers to Sinners, suggested as a match for the town's NFL team the Saints.

Gov. Edwin Edwards was pulling for the Angels. Someone else suggested changing Timberwolves to Loup Garou, a swamp werewolf in Cajun legends.

There are those who are still hoping for the return of the name Jazz.

"It was a good name for a team here," said Nick White, 57, who watched the NBA franchise when it wore Mardi Gras colored uniforms and played in New Orleans. "People snicker when they say 'Utah Jazz,' but that doesn't mean we can't come up with a better name now."

But, on radio talk shows other suggestions poured in. Examples: the Spice, the Blues, the Fever, the Crawfish and the Skeeters.

Perhaps the cruelest for a team that won only 20 games last season was the Possums — they play dead at home and get killed on the road.

And if all else fails, the name Jazz, which went to Utah when the team moved in 1979, could be for sale, according to Tim Howells, Utah Jazz general manager.

"I'd be hesitant, but it would be worth considering," said Howells.

Raiders consider abandoning earthquake-damaged stadium

The Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — The NFL owners opened their meetings Wednesday with the big question concerning a possible move by the Los Angeles Raiders from their earthquake-damaged stadium.

The January earthquake caused extensive structural damage to the Los Angeles Coliseum, and owner Al Davis has not said if his team intends to play there.

"Hopefully, tomorrow Al will say, 'Yeah, we'll stay where we are and reduce the size to 50,000 or we're going to go some place else temporarily,'" said New Orleans owner Tom Benson. "Al didn't cause the earthquake."

Davis said he'd share his views on the matter today. Twenty-one of the 28 owners must approve a relocation. Officials in Oakland, the Raiders' former home, have offered to take the club back at least temporarily.

Also on the owners' agenda: realignment of football's six divisions.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the two realignment proposals submitted by Pittsburgh Steelers president Dan Rooney will be discussed Thursday, as will four other proposals, but it is unlikely any decisions will be made until the next meeting Sept. 21 in Dallas.

Tagliabue said one way to cushion the impact on realignment for those teams not in a division with either of the two expansion teams is to pool the revenue from gate receipts earned at expansion home dates.

Dodgers pay Strawberry big money to hit showers

Darryl Strawberry
Won't be near Lasorta anymore

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Dodgers once paid Darryl Strawberry big money in hopes he would produce a championship in his hometown. On Wednesday, they paid him to simply go away.

Strawberry has not played this season and is in an after-care program following a four-week stay in a substance abuse clinic. What's next for him is unclear, although his attorney said his client will play baseball again.

The Dodgers said they reached a settlement with their troubled outfielder, who was to be paid $3 million this year and $5 million in 1995 to finish out the five-year, $20.25 million contract he signed Nov. 8, 1990. The Dodgers would not disclose settlement terms.

As part of the agreement, worked out by Strawberry, the Dodgers, the Player Relations Committee and the Players Association; the Dodgers will request waivers on Strawberry's contract for the purpose of giving him his unconditional release. If he clears waivers, he will become an unrestricted free agent.

"There is no question that this is the appropriate resolution," Strawberry's attorney, Robert Shapiro, said at a Dodger Stadium news conference. "The Dodgers have been exceedingly cooperative.

"I would say that it's highly unlikely he'll play again this season. I believe at the beginning of the 1995 season, Darryl will be a member of a major league team, and be one of the most productive players in the game. He is in exemplary physical condition. He is now working on his mental and emotional condition."

Strawberry, 32, admitted to a substance abuse problem April 4, the day before the Dodgers began their season, and spent nearly a month at the Betty Ford Center in Rancho Mirage, Calif. He has been in an after-care program since being discharged from the Ford Center.

"I'm grateful to the Dodgers and the city of Los Angeles for the opportunity to have played in this great city," Strawberry said in a statement released at the news conference. "I regret that I did not live up to everyone's expectations, but I have received a lot of support during the period of rehabilitation, and I will always be thankful for it."

Strawberry, who grew up in Los Angeles, spent eight seasons with the New York Mets before signing with the Dodgers. He came home as one of baseball's top sluggers, but with a stormy past.

He had said more than two years before signing with the Dodgers that he hoped to return to Los Angeles when his contract expired with the Mets in 1990. But the homecoming didn't work out.

"My concern right now is I hope Darryl becomes very, very healthy," Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda said. "He had a ton of talent, there's no doubt about it. He could literally carry a club when he got hot. I think the guy's still got a lot of good baseball in him."

Strawberry hit 28 homers and drove in 99 runs for the Dodgers in 1991 despite missing 23 games because of an injured left shoulder. The Dodgers finished one game behind the Atlanta Braves in the NL West.

Johnson strikes out 9, Wilson hits in run for Mariners' 1-0 shut out

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Randy Johnson struck out nine and Dan Wilson drove in the lone run as the Seattle Mariners shut out the Oakland Athletics 1-0 on Wednesday.

Johnson (5-3) gave up four hits in pitching his ninth career shutout. It was his second straight complete game and third this season.

In the second inning, A's starter Ron Darling (3-6) walked Tino Martinez, who advanced to second on a Mike Blowers' single. Felix Fermin tapped a sacrifice bunt before Wilson's hopper to right scored Martinez with the game's lone run.

The A's threatened in the fourth, loading the bases with two outs for Scott Brosius, who broke his bat grounding out to third.

Orioles 6, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Jamie Moyer allowed six hits over eight innings as the Orioles handed the Brewers their 14th straight defeat.

The last AL team to lose 14 straight was the Seattle Mariners in 1992. Milwaukee, which last won on May 10, lost a three-game series at home for the first time since April 1988.

Baltimore matched its longest winning streak of the season with its fourth straight and Moyer (2-3) won for the first time since April 19. Lee Smith got out of a bases-loaded jam in the ninth for his major league-leading 19th save.

Tigers 9, Angels 7

DETROIT — Mickey Tettleton hit a three-run homer and John Doherty carried a one-hitter into the seventh inning Wednesday night as the Detroit Tigers held off the California Angels 9-7.

Tettleton's homer keyed a four-run first inning, and Chris Gomez added three RBIs with a pair of doubles for the Tigers, who built a 7-0 lead and then had to hang on.

Doherty (6-3) gave up two runs and five hits over 6 1-3 innings. He has won five of his last six starts. Mike Henneman, Detroit's fifth pitcher, worked the ninth for his sixth save.

Doherty retired 13 of the first 14 Angels. His only mistake was a two-out walk to Gary Disarcina in the third, until Jim Edmonds doubled with one out in the fifth. Doherty then retired the next six before tiring.

Yankees 5, Blue Jays 2

NEW YORK — Wade Boggs, showing a sudden power surge, hit two home runs Wednesday night and led Jim Abbott and the New York Yankees over the Toronto Blue Jays 5-2.

Boggs, who did not homer in the Yankees' first 35 games, has hit five home runs in his last five games. He had the fourth multi-homer game of his career, and first since May 1992. He drove in three runs and got four of New York's 16 hits.

Abbott (6-2) pitched a six-hitter for his fifth straight victory. He struck out four and walked two in his first complete game since his no-hitter last Sept. 4 against Cleveland.

The benches and bullpen emptied in the eighth after Luis Polonia, who had four hits, was thrown out stealing at third base to end the inning. Polonia took exception to what he seemed to think was a hard tag by Toronto third baseman Ed Sprague.

Royals 8, Rangers 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kevin Appier struck out 13 in only 5 2-3 innings — one away from the team record — and the Kansas City Royals defeated the Texas Rangers 8-3 Wednesday night.

Appier (4-5) struck out every Texas starter and fanned Will Clark three times. He struck out the side in the second and fifth innings, and nearly matched Mark Gubicza's club mark of 14 strikeouts set in 1988.

The right-hander, who's fought a season-long slump, took a two-hitter and a 4-0 lead into the sixth. But he gave up a two-run homer to Ivan Rodriguez and a triple to Chris James, and was relieved by Billy Brewer.

Appier, whose 2.56 ERA last year led the league, was pulled after 108 pitches. He walked three and fell one short of the AL's season high for strikeouts, set by Toronto's Pat Hentgen on May 3 in a 1-0 victory over Appier and the Royals. Appier struck out 10 in that loss.

White Sox 12, Twins 1

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas hit two homers and Alex Fernandez pitched four-hit ball over eight innings Wednesday night to lead the Chicago White Sox to a 12-1 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Thomas went 4-for-5, drove in five runs to match a career-high, and hit his 16th and 17th homers to help the White Sox win their season-high fifth straight game and eighth in their last nine.

Fernandez (5-5) struck out six and walked one in winning for the fourth time in his last six starts. Fernandez is 5-0 in his last five starts against the Twins.

Lankford homers, doubles to lead Cardinals

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Ray Lankford homered, doubled twice and drove in three runs Wednesday night and the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Philadelphia Phillies 10-5.

Tom Pagnozzi homered and doubled and Mark Whiten also homered for St. Louis, which set a major league record Tuesday by stranding 16 runners in a shutout loss. The Cardinals took a 4-3 lead with two runs in the sixth inning and scored five more in the seventh.

Pete Incaviglia homered for the fourth time in four games for the Phillies, who were bidding to reach the .500 mark for the first time since April 21. Philadelphia lost for only the third time in 13 games.

Pagnozzi tied it at 3 in the sixth with a solo home run. Luis Alicea doubled off Mike Williams (2-1) later in the inning and, after two walks, Ozzie Smith hit a sacrifice fly.

Expos 3, Marlins 1

MIAMI — Darrin Fletcher drove in two runs and Ken Hill earned his eighth victory as the Montreal Expos beat Florida.

Hill (8-2) tied St. Louis' Bob Tewksbury for the NL lead in wins. He left the bases loaded twice while allowing one run, five hits and a season-high three walks in seven innings. John Wetteland pitched two scoreless innings for his fifth save.

Fletcher, who had a career-high five RBIs Tuesday against Florida, homered as Montreal moved seven games over .500 for the first time this season. The Marlins, who have lost five of their past six games, fell to .500 for the first time since April 30.

Ex-Expo Mark Gardner (1-2) gave up seven hits and two runs in six innings.

Rockies 3, Reds 2

DENVER — Andres Galarraga's home run in the sixth inning Wednesday night broke a tie and sent the Colorado Rockies over Cincinnati for their third straight win. The Reds lost their fifth in a row.

Galarraga's 16th homer came off Jose Rijo (2-3), who failed in his third attempt to get his 100th career win.

Mike Harkey (1-4) pitched two innings of two-hit relief for the win. Steve Reed got one out in the ninth and Bruce Ruffin finished for his fourth save.

Whitsitt considers end to leading Supersonics

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle SuperSonics president Bob Whitsitt, the NBA's Executive of the Year, may be leaving the franchise and could be taking another general manager's job in the league.

Sonics owner Barry Ackerley announced Wednesday that Whitsitt has submitted a written request to be released from his contract.

Ackerley said he will take Whitsitt's request under advisement.

"I am very disappointed by this request," Ackerley said in a statement. "Bob is a valued employee and friend. He is an integral part of the Sonics team and has been since joining the organization in 1986.

"Bob did not go into detail about the reasons behind his decision other than to express his interest in pursuing business opportunities unrelated to basketball."

Whitsitt, 38, has been president of the Sonics for eight seasons under Ackerley. He was given the general manager's title after the 1991-92 season.

He signed a five-year contract with Ackerley prior to the 1992-93 season.

Just a couple of hours after denying he was entertaining offers to leave the Sonics, Whitsitt issued a statement through the club saying he had discussed "a possible mutual release" from his contract with Ackerley.

He refused to comment further and did not return telephone calls.

"Barry Ackerley and I discussed my future options with the SuperSonics organization today, one of which included a possible mutual release from my contract," Whitsitt said.

"Nothing has been resolved. I have no immediate plans. Barry Ackerley and I talked about some possible career alternatives but everything, inside and outside of basketball, is open for my consideration."

Susan Mortensen, an Ackerley spokeswoman, said the owner would comment further on his statement Thursday.

Ackerley, owner of the Sonics for 11 seasons, hired Whitsitt as the Seattle president when Whitsitt was 30. Whitsitt was then the assistant general manager of the Sacramento Kings.

Motley crew lands NBA new New Orleans team

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — One was looking to stage prize fights, two wanted to build drug rehab centers and one was a lawyer who once wanted to buy the Houston Rockets. An unlikely group of investors made an unlikely deal and landed an NBA team for New Orleans.

"I wanted to bring a major fight to New Orleans and Gov. Edwards asked, 'Why not basketball?' I'd never given it a thought before that," fight promoter Bob Arum said. "I'm as amazed as everyone else."

Arum, former Houston mayor Fred Hofheinz and Patrick Graham, a Texan in the construction business, were rounded up by Edwards and pushed to make a deal.

The group, along with Houston lawyer John O'Quinn, are the new owners of the Minnesota Timberwolves, to the amazement of many, including the governor.

"I thought the odds were probably 90-to-1 against us," Edwards said.

The deal always seemed unlikely. After all, Minnesota was working to keep the team, the NBA commissioner wanted them to stay in Minnesota, and everyone was having trouble finding investors with enough money available.

Edwards said the two biggest investors he contacted first were not interested, so Arum and Hofheinz became his next targets.

"I backed these horses because they were the only game in town," Edwards said Tuesday. "I couldn't find anybody else who was willing to come up with that kind of money."

In fact, Arum and Hofheinz could not come up with that kind of money either.

A former mayor of Houston, Hofheinz had helped his father, Judge Roy Hofheinz, promote the Astrodome. He also got into oil and gas but left after one of his exploration companies was forced into Chapter 11 bankruptcy in 1988.

After an unsuccessful attempt to regain the mayor's office in Houston, Hofheinz returned to practicing law and running drug rehabilitation clinics in Texas.

Graham, brought in as a consultant on the Louisiana rehab project, and his brother Michael, described by Arum as two of several minority partners, are still sorting out legal fallout from a failed prison-building business in Texas.

look at the big picture," said Jim Irsay, general manager of the Indianapolis Colts, "and do what's best for rivalries and the long-term growth of the league."

One realignment proposal drafted by Rooney has the Buffalo Bills moving to the AFC Central; with Atlanta jumping from the NFC West to the AFC East, along with the Jacksonville Jaguars.

Tampa would join the NFC East with the Arizona Cardinals taking Atlanta's spot in the NFC West.

"Everyone I talk to agrees that there should be realignment," Rooney said, "but nobody's volunteered to move. It needs to happen quickly or it's not going to happen at all."

Dolphins coach Don Shula said the realignment decision will be a "long, drawn-out" exchange.

"I just hope they end up with the right mix," Shula said of the Buffalo to AFC Central proposal. "Obviously, a rivalry builds up over a period of time. And all that's going to be taken into consideration before any decisions are made."

Buffalo owner Ralph Wilson laughed off the suggestion of a division shift.

"That's the biggest rivalry in the NFL, the whole league," Wilson said. "The Dolphins-Bills. That would be the craziest thing I ever heard."

On other matters, Tagliabue said teams will be able to maintain a permanent 53-man roster. Final cuts must be made on the Sunday (Aug. 28) before opening day. Last year, they had to cut six players on the Monday before opening day. The 45-man roster plus an emergency quarterback on game-day remains in effect.

Procedures regarding stocking the two expansion teams were put off until a later date.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Mark Messier guaranteed Game 6 and delivered.

Messier scored three third-period goals, including the game-winner with 7:48 to play Wednesday night, and the New York Rangers rallied from a two-goal deficit to beat the New Jersey Devils 4-2 and force a seventh game in the Eastern Conference final.

The deciding game will be played Friday night at New York City's Madison Square Garden, where the Devils have already won two of three games in this series. The winner will open the Stanley Cup final series next Tuesday against Western Conference champion Vancouver.

For 38 minutes, it appeared that Game 7 would not be necessary as the Devils opened a 2-0 lead on goals by Scott Niedermayer and Claude Lemieux and thoroughly dominated play with Martin Brodeur stopping several good chances by New York.

The time seemed ripe for another chapter of Stanley Cup frustration for the Rangers, who have not won it all since 1940, but Messier and Alexander Kovalev refused to let New York die.

Kovalev got the Rangers going late in the second period with a goal and Messier, who had been on five Stanley Cup champions with Edmonton, tied it early in the third.

After Brodeur stopped several good scoring chances, Messier, who on Tuesday guaranteed a Rangers' victory in Game 6, came through with the teams skating 4-on-4.

Brian Leetch sent Kovalev into the Devils zone with a cross-ice pass and the Russian fired a shot that bounced off Brodeur and down to the ice, where Messier banged it into the net with Bernie Nicholls draped all over him.

Messier added an empty-net goal with 1:45 to play with New Jersey on a power play.

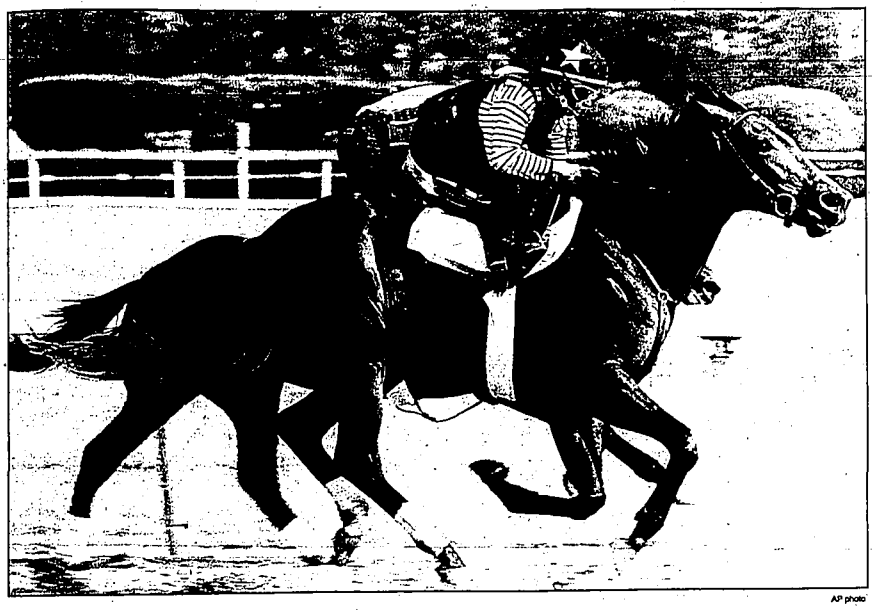

The Rangers finished with 36 shots on goal, including a 14-4 advantage in the third period, and Mike Richter made 28 saves.

The Rangers, who were playing without defenseman Jeff Beukeboom, who was suspended for one game for a hit on Stephane Richer in Game 5, managed to resurrect their season in a 4:29 span bridging the second and third periods.

Kovalev, who had not done much since being cross-checked in the neck by Nicholls in Game 3, cut the lead to 2-1 by taking a drop pass from Messier and beating Brodeur from the dot in the right faceoff circle after first faking a shot from the top of the circle.

Messier tied the game 2:48 into the third period by taking a pass from Kovalev in full flight and beating Brodeur with a backhander from the right faceoff circle.

Krone climbs back in saddle, on her ankles again

NEW YORK (AP) — Baypark was third in the fourth race at Belmont Park Wednesday, but jockey Julie Krone was a winner before the gate opened.

Hers was a triumph of will.

She won't walk normally again on an ankle that was smashed, and she admits she can't stroll around the mall for even an hour without pain.

So be it.

"If I have to limp a little, it's worth the trade-off for being able to ride," she said.

Baypark was her first mount since she was injured seriously in a spill last Aug. 30 at Saratoga. Her ride that day, Seattle Way, fell after clipping the heels of Bejilla Lass.

It was the second bad spill of Krone's career, but this one was worse. This time she got trampled.

Krone suffered a bruised heart that could have killed her, a puncture on the inside of her elbow and a shattered right ankle. She needed two plates and 14 screws to reconstruct the ankle.

At the time, she hoped she might be able to ride again by her 31st birthday on July 24. She came home well ahead of that bet.

Four months ago, Krone admitted she thought about never riding in another race.

"I went through a real bad depression," Krone said. "For two weeks straight, I was up all night with my ankle hurting. I said, 'Is this going to hurt all the time?'"

Then she started working horses in the morning in April, and now she's back.

She also rode in the eighth race Wednesday.

Last June, Krone became the first woman ever to win a Triple Crown race when she won the Belmont Stakes aboard Colonial Affair. At a news conference after the fourth race, she was asked how this compared.

"Nothing compares with a winning a Triple Crown race, nothing tops that," said Krone, who also is one of three jockeys to win five races in one day in the 126 years of racing at Saratoga.

"Coming back from injury is something you feel grateful for."

About 15 minutes before the start of the fourth race, fans lining the paddock started applauding.

"Julie! Julie!" they chanted.

Out of the tunnel and into the paddock strode Krone, all 4-foot-10½, 100 pounds of her. She went over to two little girls she knew and hugged them, to more applause.

When it was all over, Krone thanked the 5-year-old gelding.

"The horse behaved beautifully," she said. "It was almost as if he was stepping gingerly until I got my confidence back."

She had kind words for her doctors and for all those who wished her well while she was on the painful doubt-ridden road back.

She even thanked the railbirds, who will boo a jockey at the drop of mutuel ticket.

"Having the hard-core bettors say, 'Go get 'em Julie,' gives you a warm feeling. Even the boos will sound pretty good now. That's part of my job. It doesn't affect me," she said.

Her goal now is to get back quickly into a groove.

"I want to work six or seven horses in the morning," she said, "win six or seven races a week, or eight or nine — or five in a day."

Knicks look for more intensity

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Knicks are prepared to use the same defensive strategy against Indiana — hard on Reggie Miller, soft on Rik Smits — as long as they mix in a little more intensity.

"We put so much emphasis on Reggie and Byron Scott that it gave Smits airspace, more room to maneuver," Knicks coach Pat Riley said Wednesday. "We have to work harder on our post defense. But if Smits scores 27 points and they score 89, I'm happy."

New York beat the Pacers 100-89 Tuesday night in the opener of the Eastern Conference finals despite that many points in as many minutes by the 7-foot-4 Smits. But guards Miller and Scott — the Pacers' best outside shooters — got off just 14 shots, while regular starters Haywoode Workman and Derrick McKey went 0-for-8 and 0-for-7.

Riley was asked if the level of defense the Knicks played Tuesday would suffice in Game 2 on Thursday night in Madison Square Garden.

"The defense we played might not win another game in this series," he said. "It's going to have to be better. There were a lot of openings. They'll see it on tape. If they shoot better from the perimeter, they'll do better offensively."

Knicks center Patrick Ewing had an outstanding Game 1, with 28 points, 11 rebounds and six blocked shots. But unlike Smits, Ewing got some help from Charles Oakley, with 20 points and 13 rebounds, and backup guards Greg Anthony and Hubert Davis, with 16 and 12 points, respectively.

"Once our guards start hitting their shots, it definitely opens up the inside for me," Ewing said. "When they double-team me, I've got to kick it out, but they've got to hit the shots to make them pay. Once they hit their shots, they have to be covered. Then I can make more moves."

'The defense we played might not win another game in this series. It's going to have to be better. There were a lot of openings.'

— Pat Riley, Knicks coach

While Anthony, Davis and Derek Harper combined for six 3-pointers, starting guard John Starks managed just three points on 1-for-7 shooting.

"I wasn't worried about my offense," said Starks, who averaged 19 points during the regular season and made the All-Star game. "I was worried about playing Reggie. You have to concentrate on him. Smits is a good low-post player, but Patrick can hold his own against him."

Miller, who averaged 31.5 against New York in the playoffs last year and 22 in Indiana's first nine postseason games this season, blamed himself for not getting more than 11 shots.

"It's just a matter of me being more aggressive and more assertive," Miller said. "In the playoffs, they try to take away your first two or three moves and see what's left in the kitty."

But Pacers coach Larry Brown declined to fault Miller for his subpar performance.

"We've got to help him more," Brown said. "Their guard pressure really hurt us. We didn't run well or screen well, so it was hard for him to get his shots. I'd like to give them some credit, though. They took away his jump shot and let him drive."

Brown, who on Tuesday called Oakley the Knicks' most valuable player, expanded on that comment after practice Wednesday.

"He exemplifies everything you want in a player," Brown said. "He plays every minute as hard as he can. He does all the little things — hustle plays, keeping the ball alive — that really help a team."

Riley begged to differ.

"I don't want to downgrade what Oak has done for us this year — we couldn't have accomplished what we have without him — but Patrick is our most indispensable player, our MVP," Riley said. "Oakley is our cornerstone."

College coalition plans title game

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

MIAMI — College football's bowl coalition, hoping to thwart a national playoff, is considering a Super Bowl-like game for 1996 with as much as a $20 million payoff to be divided between participating schools.

The new plan would sever all conference ties with bowls in an effort to better ensure a No. 1 vs. No. 2 matchup. The Orange Bowl is preparing a bid to host such a game when the current coalition agreement expires in two years.

"We haven't put a pencil to it and I can't say what we will do, but it is our goal to host the national championship game," said Orange Bowl executive director Keith Tribble. "That number $20 million is out there. But we are in no position at this time to think about that type of figure."

The Orange Bowl, which has produced The Associated Press' national champion six of the last 10 years, paid a combined $8.5 million to Florida State and Nebraska for the 1994 Orange Bowl. Tribble said the Orange Bowl would bid more for the 1996 national championship game, but refused to say how much.

The primary plan bowl coalition officials are discussing involves three bowls, four conferences (Big East, Atlantic Coast, Southeastern and Big 12) and two wild-card teams.

Tribble says one of the bowls — 18 are bidding, excluding the Rose — would pick first, presumably the top two ranked teams, and play host to a national championship game. The other two bowls would select from the remaining teams. All three bowls would play Jan. 1, along with the Rose, cutting in half the current eight-bowl, New Year's Day lineup.

"All 18 bowls have been invited to bid on these three positions," Tribble said. "There is no set bowl that has a lock on it."

The new coalition may decide to rotate the national championship game among three bowls with the winning bids, Tribble said. The other 15 bowls would not play Jan. 1.

Bids are to be submitted by mid-June to commissioners of the Big East, ACC, SEC and Big 12.

Jones back in Indy lineup – for now

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Davy Jones is back in the Indianapolis 500 lineup, at least until after the final practice on Thursday.

If nothing happens to any of the other 32 starters, however, car owner Kenny Bernstein will make another switch and start Scott Goodyear in place of Jones in Sunday's race.

"That decision has not changed one bit," said Bernstein, determined to put his primary driver in the race but wanting to delay the formal substitution because of the slim chance he could get both Jones and Goodyear in the lineup.

If one of the other 32 starters cannot go, then Goodyear, as first alternate, would be added to the field.

"While the chances of an alternate actually starting the race are slight, it's happened before," Bernstein said. "We are committed to taking every measure to have both Scott and Davy in the race and, under USAC's advisement, we've elected to take these steps."

The latest move was on Tuesday, when Bernstein withdrew his original request to replace Jones with Goodyear in the Budweiser King Racing entry.

"I think it's just a case of keeping our options open, so we have the possibility of having two Budweiser cars in the race," Jones said. "We have one car that's in the race, we have one car that's the first alternate. If something should happen on Thursday to any one of the qualified cars, then the second Budweiser car, which is Scott Goodyear's car, will be in the race as the first alternate," Jones said. "In that case, we'll both stay where we're at."

Goodyear was bumped from the lineup Sunday on the final day of qualifications. Bernstein substituted Goodyear for Jones on Monday but changed his mind when he found out Jones would have become the second alternate, behind rookie Mark Smith.

And the difference between first and second alternate could be crucial if one of the other starters is disabled during the final two-hour practice on Thursday.

— Kenny Bernstein, Budweiser car owner

Tuesday's move restored the lineup to the way it was at the end of qualifications on Sunday, with Jones in the middle of the 10th row and Goodyear as the first alternate.

"Their request (to replace Jones with Goodyear on Monday) was subject to the whole thing being done," chief steward Tom Binford said. "And since I did not permit them to leave the car (Jones) in the first alternate position, they decided to withdraw the total request and take their chances on what happens on Thursday. Then they may make a request after that."

The switch would be the second for Goodyear.

Two years ago, he was bumped in qualifications but took over the car qualified by then-teammate Mike Groff. Goodyear started 33rd and finished .043-second behind winner Al Unser Jr., the closest margin in Indy history.

The last time a driver started as an alternate was in 1986, when Dick Simon was added to the lineup after Dennis Firestone's car was damaged during the Thursday practice before the race.

Jones, who was fired by A.J. Foyt in April, was hired by Bernstein last Thursday and qualified a backup car at 223.817 mph. Goodyear qualified at 220.737 but was bumped by rookie Marco Greco.

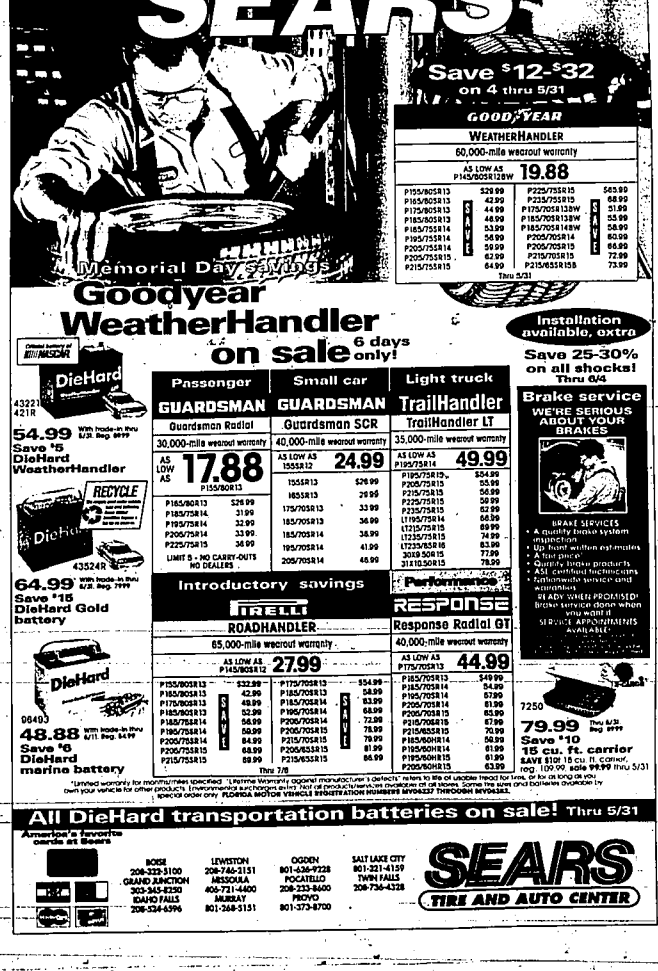

"We're teammates. We're both in the same position," Jones said. "I think we're both focusing on doing the race this coming Sunday, and we've got to prepare for that. I don't think it's difficult for Scott or myself. We both know the situation and the job we have to do."

A driver substitution or the replacement of a damaged car while keeping the same driver are far more common than the addition of the alternate to the field.

In 1987, Emerson Fittipaldi started 33rd in a backup car after he crashed during the final practice. In 1986, Mario Andretti, George Snider and Roberto Moreno all started backup cars at the rear of the field after wrecking their original cars in practice.

In 1981, Tim Richmond started 33rd in a car that was qualified by George Snider and Andretti started 32nd in a car that was qualified by Wally Dallenbach.

Andretti also started at the rear in 1978 when, because of a conflicting Formula One race, he handed the car over to Mike Hiss to qualify.

Tewksbury heeds wins, not critics

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Bob Tewksbury doesn't mind racking up a few walks as long as he keeps chalking up the victories.

"It was a novelty before that he didn't walk anybody," St. Louis Cardinals manager Joe Torre said of the National League's only eight-game winner.

Now, pinpoint accuracy is a footnote for Tewksbury, who'll try to raise his record to 9-1 on Friday at San Diego. He and David Cone of Kansas City are the only eight-game winners in the majors.

The strike zone hasn't shrunk for Tewksbury, who totaled only 20 walks in each of the last two seasons to qualify as one of baseball's best ever in walks per innings pitched. Last season he once went 55 1-3 innings without issuing a free pass, and precious few three-ball counts either.

The bottom line is a lot more rewarding. Tewksbury totaled 33 victories the past two seasons, and he's well ahead of that pace this year.

So what if every start he leaves the batters muttering and wondering how exactly he got them out. He even gets dissed by his own manager.

"I don't think he can scare anybody because he doesn't throw hard enough," Torre said.

"There are people who are 4-4 who are probably pitching better than I am, stuff-wise," Tewksbury responded. "But getting outs is the name of the game. I'm not looking for respect, I just want to get them out."

It's a bit ironic that as Tewksbury's victory total mounts, his walk count also rises. In 75 1-3 innings, he's walked 13. He talked in spring training of becoming a little wilder by design, but he said that's just a coincidence.

"It's a goal of mine, and it should be a goal of any pitcher, to throw pitches that look like strikes but aren't," Tewksbury said. "I know I'm going to walk more people than last year.

"I'll probably end up with 30-35 walks and everyone will make a big story out of it, and it'll still be the best walks-to-innings-pitched ratio in the league."

Whatever the reason, Torre and pitching coach Joe Coleman welcome a few free passes from Tewksbury, whose control was so good last season that hitters could dig in at the plate. He ended up allowing 258 hits in 213 2-3 innings, compared with 74 hits this season, of just under one per inning.

"The walks he's giving up are on pitches he's just missing," Coleman said. "It's not like he's all over the place. A couple of times last year he could have walked people and didn't, and they ended up hurting him, so we've changed our mindset about that. He's pitched very, very well."

He's also come a long, long way. The Chicago Cubs basically gave up on Tewksbury after he hurt his arm in 1988. It turned out that Tewksbury, 33, was just a late bloomer.

"Two years later, I found out Dr. (Arthur) Pappas said he didn't think I'd ever pitch again," Tewksbury said. "I'm glad he didn't tell me at the time because it would have put a negative thought in my mind."

In the last four-plus seasons, Tewksbury has become one of the most consistent pitchers in the majors with a record of 62-37. But he'd rather put on blinders than talk about his success story.

"People keep bringing it to my attention, reporters, people at the grocery store, people from back home," Tewksbury said. "As far as I'm concerned, you get a win and you're 0-0 again."

Panel chooses Costa del Sol for Ryder Cup

VIRGINIA WATER, England (AP) — The Ryder Cup is headed to Spain's Costa del Sol, upsetting Seve Ballesteros' dream of being captain of the European team on the course he designed.

The Ryder Cup committee Wednesday chose the Valderrama course over the Ballesteros-designed Novo Sancti Petri in Cadiz as the site for the tournament in 1997.

Valderrama, a private club dubbed the "Augusta of Europe," was the unanimous choice of the six-man committee. The picturesque course, located near Gibraltar, is run by Bolivian multimillionaire Jaime Ortiz-Patino and has been the setting for the season-ending Volvo Masters every year since 1988, earning praise from players and fans.

"There is a very, very strong feeling among the players that Valderrama is not only one of the best golf courses, if not the best, in Spain, but it is one of the very best in the whole of Europe," said Ken Schofield, executive director of the European PGA Tour.

But Ballesteros, who is expected to captain the European team in 1997, was not among the players who extolled Valderrama. The two-time Masters champion and veteran of seven Ryder Cups lobbied hard for Novo Sancti Petri and resigned from the committee three weeks ago because of the perceived conflict of interest.

"I told you it would be," Ballesteros said when told of the decision. "It was certain."

Schofield said Valderrama's location, accessibility, the availability of nearby accommodation, plus the promise of improvements to make the course hold 25,000 spectators comfortably were the main factors in the committee's decision.

Ballesteros, however, contended that Valderrama lacked infrastructure, was too exclusive and too well-manicured, suiting the playing style of the Americans over the Europeans. He waged a populist campaign against the course, arguing that "Augusta (the site of the Masters) and Valderrama are the two most exclusive clubs in the world."

Loser wins ovation as Muster ousts Agassi

AP photo

PARIS (AP) — Andre Agassi left the court to a hero's ovation. But not as a winner.

Agassi repeatedly battled from behind — including 1-5 in the fifth set — before succumbing to Thomas Muster in one of the most compelling French Open matches in years.

After three hours and 43 minutes of fierce clay-court tennis, Muster emerged with a 6-3, 6-7 (7-5), 7-5, 2-6, 7-5 victory.

Agassi bowed and blew kisses to the crowd before walking off to a standing ovation on the new Court A at Roland Garros.

"It's very disappointing," he said. "When I got the match tied up at 5-all, my expectations were there ... I just gave it everything I have and it didn't fall for me. He picked up his level of play and deserves a lot of credit for the way he finished the match."

Muster was just as heroic in the second-round victory as he overcame blisters on both feet, Agassi's inspired comeback and a crowd pulling wildly for his opponent.

"At 5-1, he just risked everything because he had the match lost already," the 11th-seeded Austrian said. "He was putting me under pressure and he had the crowd on his side. I had to play against everybody."

Agassi's dramatic comeback efforts were nearly undermined by his language — he was warned once for an obscenity in the fourth set and received a penalty point in the fifth set for a second offense. A third violation and he would have been defaulted.

Agassi was defiant afterwards.

"A match like that and that's what you ask me?" he said when a reporter queried about his language. "I'll choose to pass."

Moments later, however, Agassi criticized French chair umpire Bruno Rebeuh for giving him a penalty point for shouting out "Faggot!" at himself after making an error.

"I didn't say anything worthy of a point penalty," Agassi said. "It's something I've said frequently and said earlier in the match. I was under the impression it was OK. It's sad the guy in the chair could do that. Had I known, I certainly wouldn't have said it."

The Agassi-Muster match was the highlight of a day that included victories by top seeded Pete Sampras, defending champion Sergi Bruguera and former two-time titlist Jim Courier. Top women's seed Steffi Graf also advanced.

It was the fifth career meeting between Agassi and Muster — and for the fourth time the Austrian's power baseline game prevailed.

Agassi, runner-up here in 1990 and 1991, was unseeded for the first time in a Grand Slam since 1987 because his ranking has dropped to No. 19 following a five-month layoff with a wrist injury.

Agassi lost badly in clay-court tournaments this spring in Monte Carlo and Rome, but was pumped up to do well in this Grand Slam event.

"I never seem to surprise myself when I come to Grand Slam tournaments," he said. "When somebody pushes me and in a tense environment like that, I rise to the occasion."

TWIN FALLS – City police are investigating a child abuse claim involving a 3-year-old girl.

The case was reported by the Department of Health and Welfare to police Wednesday morning. Detective K.C. "Chuck" Dudley said his investigation is just beginning.

He did say he has a suspect in the case, and the suspect is not one of the child's parents. No arrests had been made Wednesday.

Commission to discuss Jerome murderer's parole

BOISE – Convicted triple-murderer Charles Heughins' request for parole will come before the state Commission of Pardons and Parole again today in a closed meeting.

The commission will meet in executive session at 8:30 a.m., according to administrative secretary Barbara McIntosh.

Heughins, 67, has been in prison since 1974, when he killed his estranged wife and two in-laws in Jerome. He was to be paroled in October, but public outcry prompted the state to review that decision.

The parole date is set to be formally reviewed at the commission's July session.

Buckle Up America Week to promote seat belt use

TWIN FALLS – The number of fatal accidents in Idaho is up 40 percent in 1994 over the first four months of last year, and the Idaho State Police wants to reverse that trend by encouraging seat belt use.

This week is Buckle Up America Week and is being marked across Idaho with a series of press conferences where those who have been "saved by the belt" tell about their experiences.

"Saved by the Belt" T-shirts and certificates were presented Tuesday to Angelina Coto, Rupert; Julia Lane, Hansen; the Rev. Baldwin Camin, Jerome; the Walker family of Twin Falls and Cynthia Salcido of Hagerman.

Idaho's seat belt use has increased by about 25 percent since 1989, said Marie Bishop, Office of Highway Safety Manager.

ROGERSON – Anyone who wants to camp at Lud Drexler Park, next to Salmon Falls Dam, can do so for free on June 11.

The Bureau of Land Management will waive its regular camping fees that day in honor of Idaho Outdoors Day.

The park, which is located seven miles west of Rogerson, has 14 ramadas, 20 picnic tables, restrooms and running water. For more information, call 677-6641.

Wildflower admires can see variety at Valley rest areas

JEROME – Between now and the end of June, some of the best places where drivers can stop and smell the wildflowers are at the Jerome and Bliss rest areas off I-84.

"Some of the people we see in here are on the verge of going to sleep," said Layne Hall, a district maintenance foreman of the Idaho Transportation Department, who oversees the planting of the flowers. "This gets them out of their cars and takes their mind off of driving — it wakes them up."

Name recognition pays off

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The two winners in Tuesday's crowded Republican primaries for county commissioner said name recognition gave their campaigns an added edge.

Brent Reinke, a nine-year member of the Filer City Council, won the four-man District 1 GOP commissioner race with almost 39 percent of the vote. Pam Dowd, a former Twin Falls city councilwoman, won her five-person District 3 GOP commissioner race with 33.6 percent of the vote.

Reinke, 40, said early Wednesday morning that he was "grateful" that his margin of victory was probably large enough to rule out a recount.

His nearest challenger, Buhl farmer Gary Grindstaff, finished 949 votes behind with 23 percent of the vote.

"In the business I'm in, we're very visible," Reinke said.

Reinke is the owner of Mr. B's Fine Foods restaurant in Buhl, and he has been a vendor at the county fair for eight years.

That visibility in the community was bolstered by a lot of time – and money – spent on Reinke's primary campaign. According to pre-election spending reports filed before the final week of campaigning, Reinke outspent his nearest Republican challenger by almost $3,000.

Reinke said he also targeted key individuals for support.

"I made the rounds of who I considered to be the movers and shakers in Twin Falls County," he said.

He started those rounds with the county's GOP central committee in February. He also made early campaign stops during February's Lincoln Day celebrations and the Home and Garden Show.

Reinke will face Democrat Dave Bailey of Buhl in the November general election. Bailey had no opposition in his primary.

But a new person will probably be taking Republican Commissioner Norma Blass' seat on the commission next month. Blass is resigning June 1.

The GOP central committee has 15 days after her resignation to submit a list of three nominees to Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus. Committee Chairman Dave Munroe of Buhl said the committee cannot begin its search for an interim commissioner before Blass retires.

Dowd, 46, said her visibility and outspokenness as a volunteer helped set her apart from her four Republican challengers for the District 3 nomination.

"Over the years I haven't been ashamed to tell people what I stood for," Dowd said Wednesday.

County residents might not always agree with her positions, but they will always know what her positions are, she said. They also will know that she put a lot of work into reaching those stands, she said.

"After a while people realize that you will sit and listen," she said.

Dowd said she did not think the low voter turnout – only 26.2 percent of county voters went to the polls – affected the outcome of her primary.

She would not comment on her general election campaign, in which she faces Democrat Dennis Maughan of Twin Falls. She did say, however, that she could not discount Maughan simply because he is a Democrat.

No Democrat has sat on the county commission since the late 1970s.

"I still think there's going to be work to do," Dowd said. "You can't rest on your

Incumbents come through in GOP primaries

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – State Rep. Doug Jones' election night party turned into a tense poll watch Tuesday as he held off challenger Sue Burwell for House seat 22B.

Early returns from Gooding County indicated the kind of evening it would be for both candidates – each received 131 votes there.

The final totals were 1,596 votes (54.2 percent) for Jones to 1,346 (45.8 percent) for Burwell.

Jones was out of town and could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

Despite the loss, Burwell said the race was exciting and a positive experience.

"It was very challenging and rewarding. I met a lot of nice people and renewed acquaintances," Burwell said.

And don't expect her to fade from the political scene.

"Oh, you'll always see me in politics locally," she said, although she declined to say whether she will run for statewide office in the next election.

"A lot can happen in two years," she said.

House seat 24B

She beat Randy Reddington of Rupert, with 73 percent of the vote, 2,600 to 975.

Reddington, a 41-year-old Minico High School government teacher, picked a tough opponent for his first foray into real-life politics; he lost in his home county – Minidoka – by a sizeable margin: 1,118 to 711. Just 264 voters in Bell's Jerome County voted for Reddington.

Bell, 62, is a farmer and former librarian, and a long-time GOP activist. She faces no Democratic opposition in the November general election.

Senate district 24

He swamped 41-year-old Rupert farmer Harold Mohlman, 2,476 to 1,020.

Cameron said he was not overly surprised at the margin of victory given the "overwhelming response" he received during the campaign.

He credited a dedicated campaign crew of nearly 100 volunteers that allowed him to run his business and spend time with his family.

Cameron has risen swiftly through the ranks of the state Senate, serving on the Resources and Environment Committee, the

Sugar Co. agrees to pay restitution for dead fish

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The Amalgamated Sugar Co. has agreed to pay about $8,300 to replace thousands of fish killed in Rock Creek after a March 29 industrial waste spill.

The firm will also pay about $3,000 for physical improvements to the creek, such as modifying a fish ladder and building a series of low dams near the sugar factory. Further, the company will reimburse the Idaho Department of Fish and Game for $4,700 spent investigating the spill.

"It's a fair agreement," said company spokesman Ed Bulgin in Nampa. "The idea is to restore things as quickly as possible."

About 1,450 trout and 3,500 non-game fish were killed when one of the company's wastewater ponds sprung a leak and dumped thousands of gallons of wastewater into the creek. The water was heavily laced with rotting bits of sugar beets, which removed oxygen from the creek's water and triggered the fish kill.

The $8,300 for new fish will be spent over four years, said Fred Partridge, regional fish-

Resource board wants minimum flow rights

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The Idaho Water Resources Board is seeking in-stream water rights to guarantee minimum flows for four of the state's most popular rivers.

If approved by the 1995 Legislature, the applications would protect fish, wildlife, white-water boating and aesthetic beauty along the Jarbidge, Bruneau, Lower Salmon and North Fork of the Payette rivers.

The water is available, said Dick Larsen, spokesman for the Idaho Department of Water Resources.

The water board applied for the minimum flows after it listened to a plea from Marti Bridges, water policy director for Idaho Rivers United. Bridges spoke to the board at its Friday meeting in Burley.

cries manager for Fish and Game. Most of the stocking will take place in the next two years, Bulgin added.

On May 10, Fish and Game released 1,000 rainbow trout – some as heavy as six ounces – into the creek downstream from the factory. On Wednesday, the department released 250 rainbows that ranged between 1.5 and 3 pounds.

Fish and Game has also released 9,000 brown trout – some as long as 4 inches – into the creek. Before the spill, Rock Creek contained sizable browns, but the new ones won't reach "catchable" size for several years.

Over the next four years, Amalgamated Sugar will fund the release of 12,640 rainbows and 36,000 browns in Rock Creek, according to a company press release.

Filer music department grows

By Earl LeMaster
Times-News correspondent

FILER – When Larry Larson took over the school district music department the department's budget was more than $4,000.

Four years later, Larson is operating the department with only $2,000. But student participation has skyrocketed.

"Filer has a good strong music program with a great booster program and a strong parent base," he said. "If music is strong in the home, then it can enrich people lives forever."

Larsen, 38, came to Filer from Minnesota via Montana. When he took over the music department only 17 students were in high school band, 25 in choir and 16 in Madrigals.

Today those numbers have risen to include 40 students in senior band, 61 in choir and 24 in madrigals at the high school level.

Larson also directs 81 junior high school students and 100 5th- and 6th-grade students in band at Filer as well as an additional 25 5th- and 6th-grade kids in Hollister.

Larson said he has been interested in music "forever." He remembers singing at church as a child. In fact, he almost chose religion as a career instead of music.

"When I was a high school senior," he said, "I wanted to be a minister. A lot of my friends were (preacher's kids) and that's what I wanted to do."

During his freshman year at Concordia College in Moorehead, Minn., he said, he became disgruntled with the ministry and decided to go into teaching music.

He is a vocalist, brass player, conductor and pianist, but "the tuba is my main instrument," he said.

Kids today don't seem as interested in music as they once were, he said. "The Nintendo generation has really taken a toll on music programs everywhere," he said.

Larson has built an outstanding reputation for the music program at Filer, said Janie Griff, who is president of the Filer Music Boosters as well as a parent and music private teacher.

Music students seem to respond well to Larson's program that includes classical and modern music styles, she said.

Larson said he would like to see the music department expand to include music appreciation, to help the kids learn humanities, as well as composition and guitar classes.

"Music classes should be tied in with art and history to give the students a more broad-based education and to show how important music is in our lives."

Kiwanis helps school buy new piano

The Times-News

FILER – When they learned about the need for a better piano at the Filer High School about 1½ years ago, the Filer Music Boosters pitched in to raise money to buy one.

With the help of the Filer-Kiwanis, the boosters raised enough money to buy a Baldwin concert piano, which is now being used at the high school.

The Filer Music Boosters was founded in 1991 with the purpose of promoting music in the Filer schools and to support music director Larry Larson.

"Students with several years' (musical) training have higher SAT scores, better teamwork, improved communication skills, higher self-esteem, creative thinking and imagination and invention," booster president Janie Griff said.

Each year, since its inception, the boosters also have awarded two scholarships of $200 each to graduating seniors.

This year's scholarship recipients will be announced at the music department's spring show at 7 p.m. today in the High School auditorium.

Other purchases by the boosters include pep band shirts, Madrigal outfits, wireless microphones, pins, awards, and transportation and lodging for All-State Honor students.

One of the purposes of starting the boosters, Larson said, "was to get parents interested in the music program so the kids would show more interest."

United, said Wednesday. "We've already hit the maximum amount of water that should be taken from these rivers.

"The consumptive, out-of-river users have had a virtual monopoly on water rights," Paul continued. "There are a lot of other people in Idaho who own that water, too, and it's time they're able to use it the way they want."

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game supported the minimum flow request, Paul said.

Minimum flows are water rights in which the water cannot be removed from the stream. They apply to water that hasn't been claimed by anyone else and are assigned a "priority" date, which puts them behind earlier water rights; prior water rights must receive their water before minimum stream flows are honored.

"It just means that people who want to see water in Idaho's rivers are in line, along with everybody else who wants Idaho's water," Paul said. "We are by no means near the front of the line."

The concept of minimum stream flows isn't new in Idaho, but only a fraction of the state's streams and rivers are covered; only governmental bodies can hold minimum stream flow rights.

The application process will likely be a little longer and more complicated than a regular water right application, Larsen said.

Water Resources probably will advertise heavily to ensure wide public notice, then hold public information meetings to answer questions. If the applications are protested, the department will conduct formal public hearings, Larsen said.

Ultimately, the applications will be approved – or denied – by the Idaho Legislature. Sections of Badger and Wet creeks, in eastern Idaho, were granted minimum flows in the last legislative session, Larsen said.

Specifically, the applications call for minimum flows on:

- 53 miles of the Lower Salmon River, from Hammer Creek downstream to the confluence with the Snake River. The application seeks all unappropriated water, which can vary from 4,000 cubic feet per second in low water months to 33,000 cfs at times of high water. A cfs equals 646,315 gallons per day.
- 28 miles of the Jarbidge River, above its confluence with the Bruneau River. The application seeks six different flow levels, depending on the time of year. So far, only four water rights exist on the Jarbidge River, Larsen said.
- 40 miles of the Bruneau River, from its confluence with the Jarbidge down to Hot Creek. A total of six minimum flows, ranging from 73 cfs to 1,720 cfs, will be sought. So far, 95 water rights – some dating back to 1875 – exist on the Bruneau River, Larsen said.
- 22 miles of the North Fork of the Payette River, from Payette Lake down to Cascade Reservoir. The application seeks minimum flows ranging from 72 to 145 cfs.

laurels."

Maughan defeated Hansen City Councilwoman Linda Medley by almost 2 to 1 in the District 3 Democratic primary. The winner of the Dowd-Maughan race in November will succeed outgoing Republican Commissioner Jim Fraley.

County Clerk Bob Fort said he had expected about 35 percent of the county's registered voters to go to the polls on Tuesday. Only 26.2 percent did.

"I'm terribly disappointed in the turnout," Fort said early Wednesday morning.

He said he did not know why the county commission races did not lure more voters. "It's a real puzzle," he said.

Fort said unofficial totals should have been reached earlier than 1 a.m. but were not because one of the two vote-counting machines was "garbling" the ballots in a Friday test run. There was not enough time to fix the problem efficiently before the primary, he said.

In the Republican primary for county coroner, incumbent Gene Turley received 4,639 votes (80.7 percent). Turley defeated sheriff's deputy Sgt. Bill McDaniel, who received 1,099 votes (19.1 percent).

An advisory vote failed to support Sunday sales of liquor by the drink. About 60.4 percent of county voters – 4,006 – rejected the question, while 2,630 voters (39.6 percent) supported it. The liquor question also was rejected by county voters in 1986 and 1988.

The county commissioners will canvass the official vote fallies this morning.

Despite his early success in politics, Cameron said he has no aspirations beyond the Statehouse, at least for now.

Courts baffled in burglary case

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT – A man who cannot speak, hear, read or write is in the Mini-Cassia jail on $10,000 bond for reasons he may not understand – and court officials are baffled at how to proceed.

"I would say this is rare. Where do we go from here?" 5th District Magistrate Larry Duff said.

Two weeks ago police arrested Juan Barhos, 26, on a charge of burglary. Someone spotted Barhos taking a set of binoculars out of a truck near Connor's Cafe on state Highway 27, Minidoka County Deputy Prosecutor E. Scott Paul said.

On May 10, Duff assigned public defender Kent Jensen to Barhos' case. A communications expert from the College of Southern Idaho evaluated Barhos and determined that he is mentally competent, but unable to express himself, not even with sign language, Duff said.

"We have some real problems in determining what to do. We're required to inform him of the charges, and he is supposed to participate in his defense. Of course he can't do that," Duff said.

Barhos is able to act or "mime" his needs and can draw pictures. But such methods don't work well in the world of legal intricacies, Duff said.

Tuesday, Duff ordered Paul to find justification for keeping Barhos in jail. Duff asked that Paul find someone who will pay to teach Barhos to communicate. Otherwise Duff may dismiss the case.

All anyone knows about Barhos is that he may have come from New York state when he was 15 or 16, Paul said. How anyone was able to glean that information from Barhos is anybody's guess, he said.

Jensen could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

"There's a sharp mind in there, we just don't know how to tap it," Paul said.

But jail officials have observed Barhos using sign and body language, said Lt. Dennis Dexter of the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center.

"He communicates pretty well when he wants to," Dexter said.

Lazy B may forecloses on controversial landfill

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY – After months of waiting for a Boise landfill developer to pay the bills, a sub-contractor will try to foreclose on a controversial private landfill at Burley Butte.

Monte Bailey, owner of Lazy B Enterprises in Burley, has signed a complaint for foreclosure against Dispose-All Inc. and it's president, Doug Lomow, Bailey's lawyer, Robert Nielsen, said last week.

Despite promises that the company would be responding to about a dozen legal demands from sub-contractors for $578,275 worth of work already completed at the landfill, Nielsen said he and his client have not been contacted.

But no complaint had been filed in Cassia County as of Wednesday.

Dispose-All partly paid Bailey in February for preparing clay at the site but still owes $4,400, Nielsen said.

Meanwhile, Dispose-All faces more legal battles. Two companies - Kloepher Inc. of Paul and Intermountain Lining Systems of Salt Lake City, Utah - filed liens May 2 claiming $30,146 and $25,685 respectively in unpaid bills.

Lomow's lawyers agreed in April to try to settle a county lawsuit against Dispose-All, which means that Lomow would apply for a special-use zoning permit to operate the landfill, Cassia County prosecutor Stephen Bywater said.

Lomow has not applied yet, Bywater said.

Lomow has said he doesn't need county permission to build his landfill. He has said that he moved into the area several days before the county's zoning law went into effect.

Susan Duncan, an outspoken opponent of the landfill, says she and other neighbors will be out in full force to oppose the landfill before Cassia County commissioners if Lomow applies for a permit.

"We're at a standstill, watching and waiting," Duncan said.

Hansen keeps Miller as chief

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN – The City Council Monday voted to retain Jeff Miller as the city's police chief.

Police commissioner Linda Medley said the council reviewed complaints and police reports and made its decision. The council said it thought Miller was making sure the city was protected and was doing the best he knew how, she said.

He came to work for the city young and inexperienced and showed shown great improvement as an officer, she said.

The Monday meeting was called in response to a complaint by Terry Davis, Sr. at last week's council meeting. Davis told the council he thought "Miller was incapable of preforming his duties in a professional and courteous manner and was not giving protection or respect." He said he could get a petition with a great number of signatures to substantiate his statement.

Davis presented his petition to the council with 100 signatures, but about half of the signatures belonged to teenagers, Medley said.

Ken Idle told the council he had been stopped by Miller, who handled the stop in a professional manner. He also said he thought Miller was doing a good job with juveniles.

Laurie Nelson said she had been stopped twice and was glad the city had someone who was trying. She said she had been wrong and had no problem with his stopping her.

Councilwoman Medley said she felt Miller "showed no favorites" as he had stopped her one occasion. Councilman Joe Ratto agreed and told the group his family had also been stopped. What they had done was illegal, Ratto said, and he thought Miller was very professional and showed respect.

Councilwoman Elizabeth Johnson said she glad they had someone who would enforce the speed limits and stop signs.

One of Davis' complaints was that Miller wasn't a certified officer. Mayor George Urie informed the group Miller would have his certification within the next few days.

Climber falls to death

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A teenager who fell 200 feet to his death while climbing in Little Cottonwood Canyon has been identified.

Salt Lake County sheriff's spokesman Rod Norton said the youth was Adam Nunley, 17, of Salt Lake.

Nunley's 19-year-old companion, whose identity was not immediately released, said they had almost reached the top in climbing the steep cliff four miles up the canyon Tuesday when Nunley slipped. They were not using climbing gear.

Sheriff's Capt. Bill VanWagenen said rescuers found what they believed to be marijuana in Nunley's pocket and police found beer in the 19-year-old's truck.

Negotiator looks at possible waste storage site in Oregon

VALE, Ore. (AP) — Building a radioactive waste storage facility on the Shoshone-Paiute reservation could mean locating it in Oregon's southeastern corner, former Rep. Richard Stallings told Malheur County residents.

The federal nuclear waste negotiator met Tuesday with the Malheur County Court and other officials concerning a proposed Monitored Retrievable Storage Facility on the Duck Valley Indian Reservation.

Since Nevada could become home of a permanent repository at Yucca Mountain — and a retrievable operation cannot be located in the same state — Oregon's southeastern corner within the reservation would be a prime candidate for hosting one.

"The tribe has done a great job of keeping its neighboring communities informed, and explaining and letting people know what's going on," he said.

Burley council considers lane dividers

BURLEY – To reduce the number of accidents at Main Street and Overland Avenue – one of the most accident-prone intersections in the state – the City Council is considering installing lane dividers.

Concrete barriers would be placed down the middle of three of the four-lane roads for about one block each way from the intersection, said Leon Bedke, Burley public works director.

The proposal would cost about $4,100 and would prevent drivers from turning left near the intersection. The city is hoping that the state will fund the project as part of it's commitment to build left turn lanes at the intersection next year, Bedke said.

Embezzling case postponed in Rupert

RUPERT – An arraignment has been postponed in a case against a Heyburn bookkeeper charged with embezzling about $140,000 from the Minidoka County Teachers Association credit union.

Jennifer Pickett, 30, arraignment has be rescheduled at 8:30 a.m. June 8 in 5th District Magistrate Court. Her original arraignment had been set for Wednesday.

Pickett is charged with stealing money from the teachers' association credit union during her employment at Condie, Stoker and Associate. Pickett confessed to stealing money between August 1990 and April 1994, Minidoka County prosecutor Gara Newman said.

Her lawyer, Kent Church, declined to comment Wednesday.

Triple murderer's hanging set for Friday

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — A triple murderer whose crimes inspired new state laws protecting victims and witnesses lost a bid for mercy Wednesday, less than two days before his scheduled hanging.

Charles Rodman Campbell, 39, scheduled to die early Friday for the revenge killings of two women and a girl 12 years ago, still had other legal moves pending.

The state Clemency and Pardons Board voted 4-0, with one abstention, against recommending to Gov. Mike Lowry that Campbell's death sentence be commuted to life in prison.

"It's time to return the burden squarely to Mr. Campbell's shoulders," board chairwoman Anita Peterson said.

Tennessee, Nevada sites vie to store spent fuel

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Two more states are in the competition to store spent Navy fuel and other nuclear waste until the government can find a permanent repository.

The U.S. Department of Energy announced Tuesday that the Oak Ridge, Tenn., nuclear reservation and a Nevada site once used to test nuclear weapons are in the running to take spent nuclear fuel from the department's nuclear operations and the Navy's nuclear-propulsion reactors for the next 40 years.

After that, the Energy Department says, a permanent repository at Yucca Mountain, Nev., or elsewhere should be licensed and functional, and the waste can be moved there.

The Idaho National Engineering Laboratory already was among sites under study, with the Hanford reservation near Richland, Wash.; Savannah River, S.C., and five Navy sites that would accept only Navy waste.

The Energy Department will release a draft environmental impact statement next month. The public will have until Sept. 30 to comment before an alternative is selected.

Idaho could be chosen to store all, some or none of the waste until a permanent high-level-waste dump opens, said Brad Bugger, an INEL spokesman. The Energy Department says it's just for 40 years, but there's nothing final about that number.

"We're saying it's for a 40-year timeframe, recognizing there's no guarantee there will be a permanent repository" by then, Bugger said.

Though storage facilities would be built to allow retrieval at a later date, the department has not determined which storage technology to use, he said.

The department said Oak Ridge has vast experience in handling spent fuel and the Nevada Test Site has a geographically desirable location.

Nevertheless, the Nevada Test Site and its small surrounding communities that are reeling from the end of the Cold War enter the process with a political disadvantage: The Energy Department said the Nevada Test Site isn't a preferred location because the proposed Yucca Mountain geologic repository in Nevada is under evaluation.

Group wants environmental exemption end

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — The Snake River Alliance is joining a push to cancel the Navy's exemption to environmental monitoring at its land-based operations through the Clean Water Act.

As the law comes up for reauthorization, Rep. Peter DeFazio, D-Ore., has proposed an amendment to revoke the Navy's traditional freedom from detailed monitoring of radioactive and other pollutants. It applies at naval facilities at Department of Energy sites such as the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

Beatrice Brailsford, program director for the Snake River Alliance, told a House subcommittee Tuesday the military should comply with the same standards as industry.

"No individual is exempt from the Clean Water Act, nor is any industry from glassworks to grocery stores," Brailsford, of Pocatello, said in written testimony.

"The nuclear navy must play by the same rules as everyone else."

Brailsford praised the Energy Department for its voluntary effort to comply with the act, but said Congress needs to force the Navy to follow.

L.M. Boyd What's what?

What do you know about the Newton Brothers of Texas? A Smithsonian authority named Claude Stanush, who identifies them as the most successful robbers in North American history, says they killed no one, carried no guns, and stole more money from trains and banks early in this century than all the other infamous Old West thieves put together.

Claim is a good auctioneer, if typical, sells from 40 to 60 items an hour in certain sorts of sales. Beats door-to-door, daresay. Speed of the selloff depends on what items, clearly.

The false teeth makers are upset. Not every state recognizes their right to sell dentures directly to the toothless instead of only through dentists. They want to retail. It's a matter of professionalism and money and pride and money and dignity and money.

Scholars say the New River of the Appalachians is the oldest river in North America, or close to it.

Some fashion designers of late have taken to sending their models down the show runway with their faces wrapped. Sort of like The Invisible Man dressed for dinner. Could be the message is, Look at the costume, not the face. Or maybe, Gender doesn't matter. Whatever, the stage innovation has prompted talk in the trade, and that's certainly worth a pretty puny, eh?

Not all male lions have manes.

One Edgar F. Roberts, a profoundly philosophical fellow, said: "Every human mind is a great slumbering power until awakened by a keen desire and by definite resolution to do." It explains many things, including why a man gets up and goes to the refrigerator.

If "trillion" means anything to you – it does? — you know how many atoms are in a grain of salt.

Couple's budding romance is being choked by smoke

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: Knowing myself, and the loving, stable family I grew up in, I never thought I'd be twice divorced at 45, but that's another letter.

My present predicament is that I have met a wonderful man who wants to marry me. I would marry him in a minute, but there's a problem: He's a heavy smoker. He has asthma and bronchitis, and when he lights up he coughs, which makes me cringe. He keeps saying he's going to quit, but he's still smoking.

Abby, I feel as though he's killing himself, and there's nothing I can do about it. Should I continue to see him and hope he'll quit smoking? Or should I go on like this, and fall more deeply in love with him only to watch him die an agonizing death from lung cancer?

He's 54. So far, I'm distancing myself from him until I know what to do. Please help me.

– PERPLEXED DOWN SOUTH

DEAR PERPLEXED: First, not everybody who smokes gets lung cancer and dies an agonizing death.

You could (and perhaps should) tell this wonderful man that you've been distancing yourself from him because you fear that his smoking might shorten his life, and the secondhand smoke could have a negative impact on your own health.

Don't give him an ultimatum; give him an incentive. Tell him that the American Cancer Society offers stop-smoking programs, and there's also Smoke Enders and Smokers Anonymous. It could be the beginning of something wonderful for both of you. Please write again and let me know what happens. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My niece – I'll call her Carol – is a single mother with a 4-year-old son. (I'll call him Johnny.) Carol just turned 40. Since the day Johnny was born, he has slept with his mother in a single bed. They go to bed between 8 and 10 o'clock every night, and always have snacks and drinks in bed. They watch TV and cuddle until Johnny falls asleep in his mother's arms.

Abby, this child has never fallen asleep alone. Carol lives with her parents, and there is no shortage of beds in their home.

Recently, Carol and Johnny visited me in my country home, and I gave them the bedroom with twin beds. The following morning, I discovered that Carol had pushed the beds together so she and Johnny wouldn't be separated. This really bothered me.

I think Carol's emotional needs are taking precedence over what is best for her son. He has no father, and his grandparents have no say in his upbringing.

I would appreciate your assessment of this situation. No city, please, and sign me...

– CONCERNED AUNT

DEAR CONCERNED: You have good reason to be concerned. You hit the nail on the head – Johnny doesn't need to sleep with his mother nearly as much as she needs to sleep with him.

You would be doing Carol an enormous favor if you advised her to get counseling in the rearing of her son. With all her good intentions, she is "(s)mothering" her son. Johnny's pediatrician will be able to recommend the best counselor for Carol and Johnny. It is desperately needed.

Out of rut, into world

Knight-Ridder News Service

Here are a few suggestions on how to break routine, spur ideas and have a little fun. Try them at your own risk.

• Do you want a sure-fire way to catch people off-guard and make them wonder what you are up to? Then keep a smile on your face all the time. You will get all kinds of responses, such as "What are you smiling at? Why are you so happy?"

It will drive the pessimist wild. It will melt the mood of the sullen. It will receive smiles in return.

• Start a collection of something you find beautiful, fascinating or fun. My father-in-law has enough match books to stretch a mile end to end. They are fun to rummage through. People print everything on a match book cover, from the serious to the ribald.

Collect cards, stamps, photos and butterflies. I once collected a 10-gallon jug full of wine corks to make a unique life vest. Follow your hobby as long as you have space and fun. Give it away if it becomes a competitive or disruptive pursuit.

• Answer a question that puzzles you from 10 different points of view. Perhaps an answer eludes you because you have locked yourself into a rigid mind set. Write out the questions on a piece of paper. Now write out the names of nine different types of people who sit around an imaginary table with you.

First you answer the question. List what you think are the solutions to the problem. Now, how would a police officer look at it? How would a medical doctor, a bystander, a close friend, a skeptic?

Force yourself to shift your point of view. These different angles will often help you formulate a workable solution.

• Lie back in a comfortable lounge chair or on the ground and look at the sky, clouds or stars. Let your imagination go. What shapes do you see in the clouds? How long has it taken the light from that star to reach your eyes at that instant?

Think about the vastness of our universe. Imagine that small lines of light and energy connect you to all that is around you both near and far. How does that make you feel? Feel vast. Close your eyes and allow your imagination to expand to fill all you have just looked at and contemplated.

• Find something very small and look at it closely. Use a microscope or magnifying glass if needed. I like to pick miniature flowers in the spring.

Looking for a wife? Go east, young man

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It was a gray day in Red Square when Chris Ihlenfeld dropped to one knee and proposed to a Russian woman he'd met four days earlier.

At the cobbled foot of St. Basil's onion spires, Anastasia Fedorchoukova smiled sweetly down at the divorced computer technician from northern Virginia. She said yes.

They married six months later, on March 25 at the Arlington County, Va. Courthouse. Now, amid coos and cuddles in a small apartment with a large stereo, the young couple is living a fantasy that started with a magazine ad — their very own Russo-American dream.

The Ihlenfelds' union is a product of the growing mail-order bridal bazaar that has sprouted since Soviet Communism died. With Soviet emigration barriers dismantled, about 350 Russian women entered the United States last year as fiancees of American men. In 1988, only 11 women came from the Soviet Union to marry Americans.

The Ihlenfelds' marriage is the first arranged through Berel and Natasha Spivack, an American-Russian couple from Bethesda, Md.

The Spivacks are cashing in on the lucrative business of showering Washington with brides from Russia with love. Last July, the Spivacks started a business called Encounters International to introduce American men to Russian women. More than 50 Washington area men, many of them federal employees, have come to their office and grazed through photo albums and videotapes of about 300 Russian women.

Two couples have married, six are engaged, and others are busily faxing letters and pictures back and forth, sifting for true and everlasting love. About every two weeks now, another Washington area man travels to Moscow and becomes engaged.

That heavy traffic to Russia is a new wrinkle in the Washington dating scene, where the oversupply of single women is legendary. Magazines and gossip columns regularly wail about the imbalance between eligible women and men in the nation's capital. Still, the Spivacks' male clients are shelling out $3,000 to $4,000 to search for romance in a cold, gray city 5,000 miles away.

In several interviews, American men and Russian women involved in the program struck remarkably compatible themes. The men said they are sick of career-obsessed American women running to the subway in business suits and tennis shoes. The women said American men were more likely than Russian men to treat them as equal partners.

"I was tired of American women," said Ihlenfeld, 24, sitting on his living room couch, stroking his 22-year-old wife's long, blond hair. "All they cared about was their work."

According to an Encounters International flier, Russian women are "much less materialistic" than American women, as well as "more willing to follow their husband's lead" and "more appreciative of men." They also have "old-fashioned traditional family values that are getting harder to find" in America, the flier says.

On top of that, the brochure says, the "dating scene in Russia is almost non-existent, and a woman over 22 is considered past her prime. Wars and alcoholism have taken their toll on eligible Russian men and created a large number of single women... Many beautiful Russian women dream of having an American husband."

There are tough requiremements for those women, who must pass entrance interviews with the Spivacks' staff member in Moscow. Women are accepted only if the interviewer deems them reasonably slender and attractive, if they are 17 to about 55 years old, have one or fewer children and speak some English.

Natasha Spivack said 600 to 800 women have applied to the service, but only 300 have met the qualifications.

Men using the service range in age from 22 to 71, but they are mostly in their forties, and many are divorced. There are no specific eligibility qualifications.

"When I knew him more, I really began to love him," she said.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service has found no particular problems with American-Russian marriage services, spokesman Richard Kenney said.

He said women entering the country on a "fiancee visa" must be married within 90 days, and they are granted permanent resident status after two years. "Home free," he said.

Some marriages between American men and Russian women make sense, according to Harley Balzer, director of the Russian Area Studies Program at Georgetown University.

Russia wants closer NATO relations

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Russia proposed expanded relations with NATO Wednesday to deal with post-Cold War security problems. Allied ministers, eager to draw Moscow closer, welcomed further ties.

"Russia is ready to implement a wholehearted, strategic partnership with NATO," Defense Minister Pavel Grachev said in a speech during his second day of talks at NATO headquarters.

He called for a "consultation mechanism" between Russia and NATO that would deal with European and global security issues. Such a system, he said, would function "on a regular and emergency basis."

Mortar shelling breaks Rwandan truce

NAIROBI, Kenya — Rebels and the army battered Rwanda's capital with a steady rain of mortar shells Wednesday that killed two people at a Red Cross hospital and shattered the pretense of a truce.

Rebel shelling pounded presidential guard and army barracks in Kigali's heart and near the defense ministry. Army guns hit at rebel positions just outside the city center.

Peacekeepers continue efforts in Bosnia

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Government and Serb forces pounded at each other Wednesday in northern Bosnia, frustrating efforts by international negotiators to nudge their leaders back to peace talks.

At least 12 people were killed Tuesday when troops of the Muslim-led government attacked Bosnian Serb positions around Tesanj, 60 miles north of Sarajevo, U.N. officials said.

Those killed in the attack included three government soldiers and nine civilians, a U.N. spokesman, Maj. Rob Annink, said, citing reports from European Union observers.

Fascists want government ban lifted

ROME — A group of lawmakers identified with civil rights causes submitted a bill in parliament Wednesday seeking to lift the constitutional ban on the Fascist Party.

A similar move by right-wing deputies embarrassed Premier Silvio Berlusconi, whose newly formed government includes five Cabinet ministers from a party formed from a neo-fascist movement. The party withdrew the bill last week after the government was strongly criticized.

Taiwan lifts ban on travel to China

TAIPEI, Taiwan — Hit by big financial losses, Taiwanese travel agents ended a boycott of China Wednesday despite lingering anger over the death of 24 Taiwanese tourists in eastern China two months ago.

The 25-day boycott stemmed from outrage over allegations that the tourists were robbed and murdered while on a lake cruise and that the Chinese government tried to cover up the facts.

The Taipei Association of Travel Agents says about 20,000 tours to China had been canceled, costing them $1.5 million to $3.8 million in revenues.

Virulent strep survivor displays scarred skin

LONDON (AP) — A 25-year-old survivor of a dangerous strep infection that destroys flesh appeared on television Wednesday to show the result: a large patch of scarred skin stretching from his abdomen across his back.

"I can't tell you, I was in pain, severe pain," Stephen Smith told Independent Television News.

He said doctors needed three operations to cut away dead bits of fat and muscles, ravaged by toxins spewed by a virulent form of strep.

Smith is one of at least 12 people in Britain who have come forward in the past few days saying they have suffered from necrotizing fasciitis, a potentially fatal illness caused by the bacteria.

"The whole of the muscles down one side of her back were virtually digested. If we had not got rid of them she would have been dead within 24 hours," said Dr. Ralph Antrum of Bradford Royal Infirmary in northern England.

Headlines like "Killer Bug Ate My Face" and "Dither and You Die" spread across the British tabloids Wednesday. Television news carried frequent updates, tallying the number of people reportedly afflicted by the bacteria.

But public health officials insisted there was no cause for alarm.

Government Chief Medical Officer Dr. Kenneth Calman issued a statement saying there was "no firm evidence" that all the reported cases were necrotizing fasciitis. He also said there was no evidence of any increase in the normal incidence of the illness.

Doctors have confirmed that toxic strep killed two patients in Gloucestershire. A third patient with strep died but doctors said the death was due to another illness. The bacteria caused severe illness in four others. All these cases have occurred since February.

In recent days, news reports have said 10 others have died from strep this year. But public health officials said they need to investigate each case.

"I think it would be highly speculative for anybody to jump to any conclusions at the moment," said Dr. Jeff Norwood, one of the doctors at Gloucestershire Health Authority investigating the outbreak.

Though virulent forms of strep occur occasionally, it is very rare to see so many cases in one community.

Hunting expert aims to find middle ground

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Is there a middle ground in the gun-control debate, which has reached a crescendo since Bill Clinton moved into the White House? Joe DeFalco thinks so.

DeFalco is perhaps best-known for the annual hunting expos he conducts in New York, his best-selling book, "The Complete Deer Hunt," and his excellent video "Field Dressing, Skinning and Butchering Your Deer." A former butcher, he parlayed his knowledge of field-dressing deer into a full-time outdoors career. He's had his own outdoors television show on cable, been profiled in Sports Illustrated and taught Burt Reynolds how to shoot a bow for the movie "Deliverance." DeFalco also has worked tirelessly to help youngsters and those in need.

The proceeds of his expos go to worthy causes, such as rural fire departments, handicapped children and the families of police officers killed in the line of duty. He was chairman of the Telly Savalas Charity Ball and he has enlisted the aid of numerous professional athletes and entertainers to help kids "stay straight with sports, stay away from drugs and learn to appreciate the outdoors."

Steve Waters

"I'd rather teach kids to shoot a gun than to shoot a needle in their arms," DeFalco said.

A grandfather who will be 65 next month, DeFalco now is focusing on guns. He wants to ban some and register others, but also punish those who use guns illegally. Although he's a life member of the National Rifle Association, he said the NRA does nothing for hunting or this country's 20 million hunters.

DeFalco proposes forming a national organization that caters to the needs of hunters. He also wants to establish a national group that will put an end to both firearm violence and the stream of anti-gun bills that is flooding lawmakers at the local, state and federal levels. That latter organization would be called ANGER — Americans for National Gun Education and Restrictions.

"I see New Jersey Bart Fry shotgun and I see people getting killed on the Long Island Rail Road," said DeFalco, who splits his time between New York and Hallandale, Fla. "I say we better wake up and take a middle-of-the-road approach. We've got to stop it now or these (anti-gun politicians) will take all our guns. They don't know the difference between hunting guns and other guns. We'll teach them the difference."

ANGER's goals would include:

—Uniform federal gun licensing and registration for all rifles, shotguns and long guns, which would override current state laws.

—Establish a federal handgun license that would allow individuals to carry a handgun anywhere in the United States. Applicants would have an extensive background check and take a firearms training course and pass a shooting test to get the license.

—Pass laws that mandate the death penalty for anyone convicted of using a gun in a murder. Anyone possessing an unregistered gun would get a minimum of five years in prison and have to pay for the cost of the imprisonment.

—Ban all firearms with a capacity for firing over six rounds, except for .22-caliber rifles and guns used by law enforcement officers.

—Educate the public about guns through videos, school programs, television and radio shows, newspaper and magazine articles, and advertisements.

Member dues for ANGER would be minimal and none of the organization's directors would be paid. DeFalco would have corporate sponsors underwrite costs. He also wants to get people such as Robert Brennan involved. Brennan put up the "Gun Fighters Death Clock" in New York City, which displays the number of guns and gun-related deaths in the United States.

"I believe Brennan is 100 percent sincere, and he can really help us," said DeFalco, who persuaded Brennan to change his death clock sign from "Take Aim Against Guns" to "Take Aim Against Illegal Guns."

ANGER will get its other objectives met, DeFalco said, because there's strength in numbers.

"If the NRA has three million members and we have 10 million, politicians are going to say, 'We better sit up and take notice.' The power of the organization has to be in the number of votes. A politician like (Charles) Schumer (an anti-gun New York Congressman) would be gone," DeFalco said. "We're going to say, 'These are the guns we use, so leave them alone.'

"My main goal is to get illegal guns off the street and protect the sportsman and the Second Amendment. I'm also in it to make sure my grandchildren and their grandchildren can live on this Earth peacefully and not have to worry about getting shot in school."

Valley stream conditions good, but outlook bad

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — Magic Valley anglers should find stream conditions ideal — perhaps unfortunately too ideal — when the general fishing season opens this weekend.

A lack of spring runoff has left all area streams running low and clear, good for early season but bad for the outlook of later this year and carryover into next year.

"I'd suggest fishermen had best go now because later this summer they may have trouble finding water," said Fred Partridge, Magic Valley region fishery manager.

The usual preparations have been completed, stocking of the Boise Rick South Fork and Rock Creek — both in town and on forest land.

Partridge said part of a final agreement with Amalgamated Sugar over its waste spill earlier this spring requires the corporation to pay for some larger fish for immediate boosting of the urban fishery.

"Those fish were planted Wednesday and should be available for Saturday morning," said Partridge, although lower Rock Creek is open year-round.

Big Wood River and Silver Creek should be in excellent condition.

"It's probably still too early for mountain lakes but people should get into those earlier than normal," Partridge said.

Most irrigation reservoirs are still accessible to boat owners.

"At least we haven't heard of any where the water is below the boat ramps," he said. "The year-round reservoirs have been pretty good fishing."

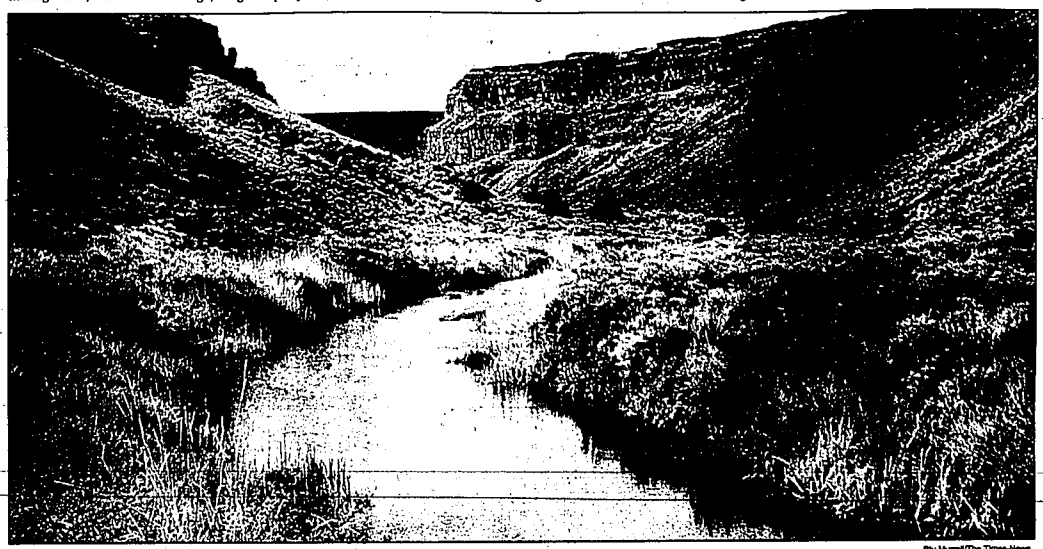

Partridge said he already has put emergency machinery in operation to have some special regulations available if and when the irrigation impoundments reach lower levels.

But he emphasized only general regulations apply to all waters of the area to this point.

There are basically only two major changes from last year's regulations.

"We need to remind people, especially those fishing on the South Fork of the Boise and Jarbidge that bull trout no longer may be kept. They must be released."

The other affects very few since it applies only to a 20-inch minimum for keeping bass on Dierke's Lake. The regulation is designed to promote trophy fishing while also reducing the stunted bluegill population.

By Stu Murrell
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A recent spring walk in the sagebrush/grassland area near Twin Falls got me to thinking about the high desert country of southern Idaho.

The grassland, interspersed with wildflowers, was lush from recent rains. New sagebrush seedlings carpeted the ground underfoot. Songs of meadowlarks and sage thrashers could be heard along with alarm chirps from rockchucks.

I watched a pair of redtail hawks feed mice to three fuzz-covered young in a cliff nest. Their shrill screams let the world know this was their territory.

This is an ecosystem at work.

Exploring the high desert can be a great experience this time of year, particularly if an outdoors person understands the inner workings of this unique environment.

A good share of southern Idaho in those areas of 7-10 inches of rainfall can be considered high desert with Owyhee County making up the greater portion of it.

The early settlers encountered vast areas of mixed bunch grasses and sagebrush with willows, cottonwoods and cedars lining the riparian areas along stream courses.

There were scattered bands of antelope, mule deer and bighorn sheep throughout the high desert but none of the large herds of bison found farther east in wetter climates.

Groups praise national decision to spill dam water

The Associated Press

BOISE — A decision by the National Marine Fisheries Service to spill water at Snake and Columbia River dams is a major step in the right direction, said officials of Idaho Steelhead and Salmon Unlimited, Idaho's largest anadromous sport fishing organization.

"What we have with wild spring chinook salmon is a patient in very critical condition and for the past decade we have been allowing him to die on the operating table," said Mitch Sanchotena, ISSU executive coordinator.

"Instead of acting on what's best for the salmon, the Feds have allowed themselves to be influenced by politicians representing industry interests and now, as a result, we are looking extinction of our salmon right square in the eye."

With only 600 wild spring chinooks expected to enter Snake River tributaries this year, NMFS ordered that enough water be spilled to guide 80 percent of the juvenile downstream migrations to the ocean.

Salmon advocates and state, federal and tribal fishery biologists have for years maintained that spilling young salmon over the dams offers the best hope of recovering Snake River salmon resources.

Spill is considered to be the most benign route of passage for downstream migrants, according to the Bonneville Power Administration.

"We are pleased with the fisheries service's decision to stand against political opposition and do the right thing for the fish," said Sanchotena. "We just hope they can hold up long enough to get a couple of generations of wild fish behind us. Then, and only then, can we ever prove the true effectiveness of a spill program."

Sanchotena said he is concerned that this year's wild spring run is, for praetical purposes, extinct.

He predicts that less than 100 pairs will actually mate and spawn.

When 600 adults disperse over 5,000 miles of habitat in the Clearwater and Salmon rivers in Idaho and the Imnaha and Grande Ronde rivers in eastern Oregon, it is only about one salmon in 10 miles of habitat.

"That means there will be quite a few females without males and vice-versa," said Sanchotena.

Spill does not effect barge traffic, irrigation or reservoir levels along the Snake and Columbia rivers. Instead of putting all the water through the dam's hydropower turbines, some water is allowed to flow freely through the river.

Fish numbers won't rebound enough to help fishing for years

The Associated Press

'Once the fishing industry is gone, the infrastructure to support it is gone, we may never get it back. It will take some years, but we've got to keep the infrastructure going.'

— Glen Spain,
Pacific Coast Federation of Fishermen's Associations

GRANTS PASS, Ore. — There is some good news for salmon: Once they negotiate the rivers that take them to the Pacific Ocean, they may find more food this year.

The devastating effects of the weather condition El Nino are dissipating, ending a decade of ocean warming that kept nutrients from welling up to the fish.

But that doesn't mean good times ahead for fishermen who have watched their livelihoods disappear along with salmon runs.

Given the three- to six-year life cycle of salmon, it will be years before fish migrating downriver reach maturity, when they can be taken by fishermen and return to their native rivers to spawn.

Even when the numbers of hatchery fish bounce back, fishermen still will face tight restrictions for fear of wiping out wild runs on the verge of extinction.

With the Endangered Species Act playing an increasing role, restoration of sport and commercial salmon fishing depends on restoring salmon habitat on rivers and streams throughout the West.

"People are afraid to really bite the big bullet of what does the future look like," said John Coon, salmon staffer for the Pacific Fishery Management Council in Portland, which has the grim responsibility of deciding how many salmon can be caught in the ocean each year.

The knowledge that better days are years away has fishermen pressing for government aid.

"Once the fishing industry is gone, the infrastructure to support it is gone, we may never get it back," said Glen Spain of the Pacific Coast Federation of Fishermen's Associations. "It will take some years, but we've got to keep the infrastructure going."

The governors of Oregon and Washington both have issued disaster declarations for their coastal salmon fisheries and are appealing to Washington, D.C., for additional financial assistance.

This year, the worst crash in history in the numbers of Pacific salmon forced the fishery council to stop all commercial and sport fishing for salmon from Cape Falcon on the northern coast of Oregon to the Canadian border. Coho salmon fishing was closed all up and down the coast and chinook salmon seasons were sharply cut back from southern Oregon to the Mexican border.

Hoping to boost the numbers of young salmon reaching to ocean, where they mature, the National Marine Fisheries Service took emergency steps to alter operations at eight hydroelectric dams on the Snake and Columbia rivers. They sacrificed water normally devoted to generating electricity and diverted it to spillways to flush more fish safely down the river.

Fish that have made it to the ocean in recent years have faced tough conditions.

Scientists said El Nino, which originates in the South Pacific and spreads north, had turned off the natural conditions that bring nutrients up from the bottom of the sea. It also brought changes in the patterns and prevalence of predators.

"We had a really strong El Nino in 1983. That one caught everyone's attention," and there hasn't been a strong return to colder ocean temperatures since, said Robert Kope, a salmon biologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service in Tiburon, Calif.

Groups file suit over grizzly plan

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A coalition of environmental groups that says a proposed recovery plan for the federally protected grizzly bear is full of "fundamental and sweeping" problems filed a lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Thursday.

The lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., says federal efforts to remove the grizzly from federal protection must be put on hold until the plan is revised.

The plan was put into effect in the fall, after a public-comment period that lasted about two years, according to Larry Shanks, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service division chief in Denver.

The coalition of 20 regional and national groups that includes the Greater Yellowstone Coalition, National Audubon Society, the Sierra Club, The Wilderness Society and the Montana Wilderness Association, contends federal officials don't know how many grizzlies there are in the recovery area, which encompasses the Northern Rockies.

Shanks, however, said Thursday his agency's estimate that there are at least 650 bears in the 38,000 square-miles of recovery zones in the continental United States was as good as any estimate.

"When you're counting that large an area, it's wilderness, remote (and) the animal is secretive," he said.

In addition, the groups said, the plan doesn't address protecting the bear's habitat, even though it's known grizzlies need large, secure areas.

"Unfortunately, this is a recovery plan in name only," Larry Mehlhaff, regional staff director of the Sierra Club, said in a news release. "It describes some of the steps that would ensure the great bear's survival and then fails to implement almost all of them."

The Fund for Animals also is challenging the plan, written by biologist Chris Servheen, based in Missoula, Mont. That group's lawsuit, filed earlier this month, argues the plan violates the federal Endangered Species Act.

BOISE — Idaho had no fatal hunting accidents in 1993, the first fatality-free year since record keeping began in 1953.

In addition, only seven non-fatal hunting accidents were reported among approximately 240,000 Idaho hunters last year. This placed Idaho below the national average of 6.51 accidents per 100,000 licenses sold, according to Dan Papp, Idaho Department of Fish and Game hunter education coordinator.

"Idaho's hunting accident decline reflects national trends for the last five years," Papp said.

According to the Hunter Education Association's 1993 North American hunter accident report for the last year, there was a 14 percent reduction in total number of accidents. The number includes both two-party and self-inflicted results.

Most two-party hunting accidents involve swinging on game with shotguns, shooting at upland game, covering hunting partners or not seeing partners, according to the report.

Six of Idaho's accidents last year involved the discharge of firearms or a bow and the seventh involved a fall.

He added these are all vision-related accidents that may be preventable if hunters wear hunter orange clothing while hunting upland game as most big game hunters do.

Self-inflicted accidents are the second most common cause of injury. Over 31 percent of all hunting accidents last year were self-inflicted.

Idaho hunting accidents have dropped each year since the mandatory hunter education program began in 1979. For the previous three decades, Idaho hunting fatalities averaged 12 per year. since the program began, fatalities have averaged 3.3 per year.

Bluegill fishout yields attention, few fish

The Times-News

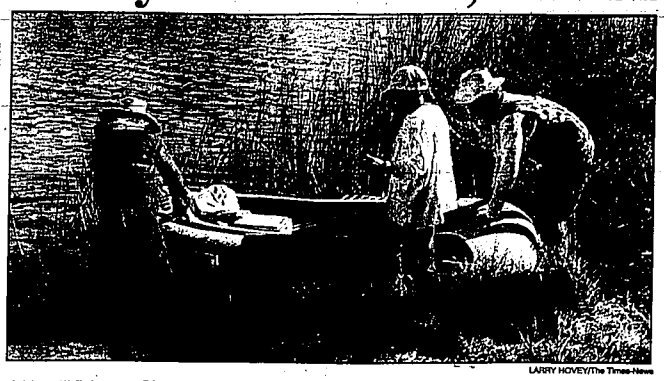

TWIN FALLS — A bluegill fishout at Dierke's Lake didn't yield a lot of fish but did serve the purposes of focusing a little more attention on the city-owned lake as an urban fishery.

Rob Smith, representing the Magic Valley Fly Fishers, put together a "work party" of about 18 anglers who pulled about 200 bluegill out of Dierke's. These were transplanted by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game to other Magic Valley impoundments.

Sampling showed that the population remains stunted, seven-year-old fish still in the seven to eight-inch range.

Smith said his group would prefer introduction of more predatory trout strains to reduce spiny ray species and enhance growth rates.

He added Magic Valley Fly Fishers will conduct a casting clinic for about 250 Boy Scouts at Idaho Power's Camp Roach on June 10.

LARRY HOVEY/The Times-News

Carroll Anthony "Tony" Moore, 43, of Marietta, Ga., was taken to St. John's Hospital in Jackson, Wyo., after suffering a severe puncture wound to his right thigh and an injured right wrist. He was in stable condition, the park reported.

Park officials said Moore and a friend, Abraham Grungold, of Salem, Mass., had approached to within 10-15 feet of the bison at the park's Lake Hotel and turned their backs on the animal to have a picture taken by a third companion, Terry Watkins of Atlanta.

The bison charged. Watkins warned the other two, who attempted to flee, but the bison gored Moore as he tried to get away.

Bison weigh up to 2,000 pounds and can run 30 mph. They are wild and will attack people who get too close. Moore's goring was the first of the 1994 summer season.

Park Superintendent Bob Barbee noted that federal law prohibits approaching within 75 feet of bison in Yellowstone.

Angler lands tuna record

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Saturday, Jim Murray and Capt. David Doll set out on Live Bait to catch a world-record fish on light tackle. At 5:30 p.m., a blackfin tuna hit off Boca Raton and 25 minutes later a record lay on the deck at Murray's feet.

The 30-pound, 12-ounce blackfin tuna on six-pound test line should give Murray an International Game Fish Association world-record catch.

"They (the IGFA) just have to make sure that all the IGFA rules work out, and that the line tests at the actual breaking strength," Doll said.

The previous record, a 30-pound blackfin on eight-pound test, was caught May 12, 1988, by Jim Anson off Key West.

An avid angler, Murray has rediscovered his sport by turning to light tackle at a suggestion by Tommy Greene, an avid light tackle angler. When using light tackle test line the angler has to be more aware of when to apply pressure or let the fish run.

Ecosystem

Man changed Idaho's high desert environment, beginning in the mid-1900s by introduction of large herds of sheep and cattle.

They reduced the native bunch grasses and concentrated along the moist riparian areas, eliminating many of the trees and shrubs.

This provided better conditions for sagebrush and jumper trees and now we see vast tracts of these species.

Invasion of exotic grasses, such as cheatgrass and medusa head, replaced the native bunch grasses. Planting crested wheatgrass to benefit domestic livestock on millions of acres also has resulted in a monotype habitat.

The word "ecosystem" also is frequently seen in the news concerning management of an area. It means the inter-relationships between the soil, water, plants and animals.

The plants produce the food and all living creatures (including man) feed on this food, either directly or indirectly as flesh eaters.

After living material dies, it is broken down by decomposers such as ants, worms and bacteria to be returned to the soil or water.

For instance, there are about 20 species of sagebrush in the Rocky Mountain area.

With just a few species in an area, any disease or other catastrophe affecting one of them can create a devastating effort on the entire ecosystem.

A number of birds and animals have adapted to the high desert environment. The sage grouse is probably the classic example, with its complete dependence on sagebrush for its livelihood.

The yellow-bellied marmot (rockchuck) and Townsend ground squirrel also have adapted to the desert by emerging from hibernation in late winter and putting enough fat on by mid-summer to go back into hibernation.

These two species provide key prey for prairie falcons and golden eagles during the time the raptors are feeding their young.

Antelope utilize the desert year-round and are particularly dependent in the summer on the wet meadow areas where springs emerge and along water courses.

Deer and elk migrate to high desert lower elevations in the winter where snow depths allow them to move more freely in their search for food.

Tropics last fall.

The cooler ocean temperatures and northwest winds that produce the crucial upwelling of nutrients have been noted this spring off California, said Frank Schwing, physical oceanographer with the fisheries service in Monterey, Calif.

Typically, those conditions move up the coast to Oregon and Washington, but that has not happened yet, said Burnie Bohn, harvest manager for the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife.

It is still uncertain whether the young fish going into the ocean from the Northwest this spring are finding enough food.

"When you get a large expanse of water that is warmer than normal, it's not like putting your fan on your bathtub to get it turned around," said Bohn.

About half of this year's class of hatchery releases is already on its way. Survival rates run from 1 percent in bad years to 4 percent in good years, Bohn said.

Clues to their fate will be apparent this fall when immature coho known as jacks start showing up.

While hatcheries are turning out 40 million salmon smolts a year, the rivers that have been hurt by habitat destruction can't produce enough wild fish — particularly runs that are threatened or endangered — to take immediate advantage of a return to productive ocean conditions, said Coon.

"Even though things turn around quickly because the ocean turns around, we won't go back to the same level of fisheries we had prior to the time we had all these depressions in natural stocks," he said. "We will be up against endangered species constraints.

"That's why the overall habitat situation in the freshwater area is so important."

Campgrounds open for Memorial Day

SAWTOOTH NATIONAL FOREST
Recreation Report

TWIN FALLS — Most campgrounds will be open in the Sawtooth National Forest for the Memorial Day weekend although some of them will be without services.

Recent rains and snow have left some campgrounds wet and users are asked to avoid resource damage.

Those using campgrounds without services should bring in their own water, toilet paper and garbage bags to take out their trash.

All roads and trails are open on the Ketchum Ranger district. However, visitors are asked to avoid roads and trails that may still be wet to prevent rutting and other damage.

The Burley ranger districts report Clearcreek, Sublett, Bennett Springs and Mill Flat campground are open without services. Lake Cleveland will be closed for the summer for reconstruction.

On the Sawtooth Recreation area, campers will find similar conditions. Campgrounds will be open without services. The Iron Creek/Stanley Lake trail is closed to all traffic.

Most trails are hikeable for a mile or two from the trailhead but then snow will be encountered.

Beginning this weekend, the SNRA resumes its seven-day a week schedule.

Baumgartner, Bowns and Canyon campgrounds on the Fairfield district are open. All three will have water by some means and services. Fees will be charged.

The roads up the Boise River South Fork and over Couch and Fleck summits have been graded.

Water will be available at some sites on the Twin Falls ranger district or available at the Rock Creek guard station.

All roads are open except No. 533 from Monument Peak to Bostetter campground.

Some wildflowers are coming on now but the majority will be in bloom at mid-June. Wildflower tours will be conducted at that time.

Visitor are reminded this is tick season and users should be especially alert around stream bottoms and riparian areas.

Fish free in Idaho

BOISE — Idaho's free fishing day is June 11, giving youngsters and adults, residents and non-residents a chance to fish anywhere in the state without a license.

Though the license requirement is lifted, all other requirements, such as limits or special tags, remain in effect.

Free fishing day began in 1985 at the direction of the Fish and Game Commission to serves as an open invitation to experience Idaho's fishing resources.

Thousands of anglers either learn for the first time or sharpen fishing skills at free fishing clinics sponsored by the department and various local sponsors.

"The primary focus is on youth but every year we include more activities and programs that adults and the whole family can enjoy," said Julie Scanlin, Fish and Game's free fishing day coordinator.

In conjunction is the fifth annual Idaho outdoors day where Idaho Power and state and federal natural resource agencies promote outdoor recreational opportunities and facilities.

Idaho Power, U.S. Forest Service, Bureau of Reclamation and Corps of Engineers will offer free camping on that day.

Idaho state parks also will participate.

Research should show outcome of land choices

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — The first director of the National Biological Survey wants the new agency's research to show land managers how their decisions will spell extinction or salvation for wildlife.

"We have reasons to believe slight changes in management practices can make major changes in wildlife populations," said Ron Pulliam, 48, a professor of ecology at the University of Georgia. "What we need is the basic scientific information to see what those tradeoffs are.

"We don't have a handle on how game management practices influence other species," said Pulliam, who took over this week. "My gut feeling is they are going to be very compatible."

But there are conflicts. Managing land for turkeys, which need openings in the forest, could hurt songbirds, which require large tracts of woodland.

Pulliam heads an agency, created in November, that has 1,800 employees, drawn mostly from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. It will be the research arm of the Interior Department, serving all of its agencies.

He conceded there has been criticism of the reorganization, particularly from within the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"I've been in the middle of controversy before," he said, adding he doesn't think there will be as much as some opponents of reorganization have suggested. "The way to solve that problem is to involve all the people (transferred to NBS) in creating a new division."

Pulliam's research has focused on using computer analysis to predict how plants and animals will be affected by land-use decisions.

A Georgia graduate who received his doctorate in zoology from Duke in 1970, Pulliam has studied or taught at the University of Chicago, the University of Arizona, the Museum of Northern Arizona and the State University of New York.

The former director of the University of Georgia's Institute of Ecology said he wants to head NBS only for three to five years, then get back to his research.

"I want to be there long enough to see it gets off the ground," he said.

"I think agencies like NBS would be well-served to have managers come in after a shorter period following their time as a researcher, with recent experience with what it's like to be an on-ground researcher. It would help to build a research culture," he said.

The key will be forging partnerships with the states and private landowners, Pulliam added.

"If you're going to study what's going to happen to (various species), you've got to bring private interest into the program," he said in an interview in his Georgia office.

He said management practices that help wildlife do not mean shutting down development.

"It could mean slight changes in operations, which might mean slightly fewer commodities, but would be much friendlier to wildlife populations," he said.

"The real goal is to provide the kind of information land managers need to maintain biodiversity."

The only way to do that, he said, is through computer models, and then only for "indicator species." There is not enough money to complete field work on large numbers of species.

Indicator species are those that have the same habitat needs as a large number of other plants or animals. "If those species are there, you'd expect the others to be there," Pulliam said.

"By modeling those indicator species, we will be able to say what's happening to other species."

Because of the role of research in making policy decisions, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt "has made it clear the National Biological Survey is his top priority at Interior ... and he will make sure not only will NBS be listened to but will have access to decision makers at the policy level."

Service will study steelhead

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — Pushed by environmentalists, the government announced Monday it will study wild runs of steelhead throughout the West to see whether the fish should be protected under the Endangered Species Act.

The decision by the National Marine Fisheries Service to study the status of the popular gamefish adds to a growing list of anadromous fish getting special attention.

Steelhead are rainbow trout that spawn and rear in rivers and streams, but spend most of their lives in the ocean. Unlike salmon, they can return more than once to spawn.

The petition by the Oregon Natural Resources Council and other groups blamed dams, heavy logging, improper grazing, irrigation withdrawals and other development for destroying freshwater habitat.

"Steelhead aren't commercially harvested in the ocean, and spend one to four years in freshwater rearing," said Richard K. Nawa, a Grants Pass biologist who prepared the petition. "Steelhead are probably the best indicator of how well or how poorly we've taken care of freshwater habitat."

The loss of freshwater habitat is especially hard on the fish at a time when the weather condition known as El Nino has caused a decline in food in the ocean and drought has lowered river flows, said Joy Belsky, ecologist for the Oregon Natural Resources Council.

The petition noted 178 runs of steelhead in Washington, Oregon, California and Idaho that are declining. The fisheries service has nine months to decide whether to propose the fish for protection and a year after that to make a final decision. It must look at each run and decide whether it is a distinct population and how its numbers are faring.

The study is the second to look at an entire species of anadromous fish, rather than individual runs. The agency has granted protection to runs of sockeye and chinook salmon on the Snake River and winter chinook on the Sacramento River. It is considering a petition to protect all coho salmon throughout the West.

Declining salmon runs already have prompted drastic cutbacks in ocean fishing, restrictions on logging and reduced power generation from hydroelectric dams in the Northwest.

If steelhead are protected by the act, it would be illegal to kill one. Catch-and-release regulations already in force on many rivers may be sufficient to protect them, said Merritt Tuttle, senior policy analyst for the fisheries service in Portland.

Environmentalists don't want to penalize sport fishermen, and would like to see continued fishing on rivers where habitat is in good shape and the numbers of fish are stable, Belsky said.

"So far the anglers have really taken the full brunt of regulation, and not the ranchers, not the loggers, not the hydroelectric dams, not the farmers," Belsky said. "We consider this unfair, but also unreasonable. Fishermen take far fewer fish than any of these other causes of decline."

Listing steelhead as threatened or endangered would force the government to do more to restore and preserve fish habitat than it is already doing under President Clinton's forest plan, Belsky said.

Environmentalists originally proposed protection for winter steelhead on the Illinois River in southwestern Oregon. The fisheries service decided the population wasn't distinct, but agreed to consider all steelhead runs for listing. With no statutory deadline, environmentalists filed a new petition three months ago.

Salmon floaters required to fill out registration

STANLEY – Anyone wishing to float the Salmon River above Torrey's Hole, about 20 miles downstream from town, will be required to fill out a free, self-registration form before launching.

Permits will be available at launch sites, the Stanley Ranger Station and the Sawtooth National Recreation Area's offices and visitor center. The Stanley-Sawtooth Chamber of Commerce and businesses specializing in river gear will also have permits.

The permits are designed to educate the public about salmon protection efforts now under way. Permits also contain information about river safety, ethics and party size; only one permit per boating party is required.

Permit boxes will be installed by May 25 and will be in place through the end of the floating season, typically around the end of August. For more information, call Frank at 774-3681 or Tom at 726-7672.

Panel writes handbook on forest stream dangers

BOISE (AP) — Build a new forest road, chop down a timber stand or remove willows from a streambank and the effects from any one may go unnoticed.

But do them all at once and topsoil could flush into a creek, turning the water chocolate brown and choking the fish.

Idaho lawmakers have required timber companies to follow specific resource management practices to curb environmental damage from their harvests.

But three years ago, the Legislature agreed there needed to be a way to gauge how combinations of actions affect the land.

Since then, a special 10-member state Lands Department task force has tried to find a way to sort that out.

The result is a guidebook to assess the footprints man leaves on the forest as he uses it. It puts looking at the land itself far above coping with some computer model.

> 'We can criticize the science, but the question is if we will end up with a better environment. The answer is yes. And can you do it without undue pain for landowners? And again, I believe it's yes.'
> — Dale McGreer, hydrologist

"This is designed to protect our resources," said Gov. Cecil Andrus, head of the state Land Board that is overseeing the project. "If we don't step up to the plate, with the resources that are in danger out there, it could bring our economy to a halt."

Task force member Ruth Watkins of the Clark Fork-Pend Oreille Coalition admitted the process is not perfect and will not be the last word on the cumulative effect of timber harvesting.

But, she said, "it's a foot in the door, a good opportunity to get a handle on where are the open sores, where are the problems."

The task force includes hydrologists and conservationists and representatives from the timber industry, and its purview is unlimited — private, state and federal forest lands. That brings in the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management.

Over three years, it has come up with guidelines to gauge the problems. The public has its chance to have its say on the plan this summer before the Land Board decides whether to put the guidelines into effect.

If it does, the handbook — and waders — goes into the backpacks of foresters as they manage the land in their charge, along with a watershed map, aerial photographs and tools to measure slopes and the tree canopy.

They check for sediment in stream bottoms, channel stability, water temperature, stream shade, nutrient chemicals and hydrological forces.

They will determine if the soil is fine alluvial silt or granite, what vegetation is growing on the slopes, if nutrients like nitrates or phosphates foster algae and whether cutting down the tree canopy raises water temperature and harms aquatic life.

"We've tried to come up with a process that if someone from the timber industry and some environmental group went to a watershed, they would arrive at similar conclusions," said Winston Wiggins, Lands Department assistant director on forestry and fire.

Task force members came from different backgrounds so it took time to set aside prejudices.

"One of these problems we had is we kept talking about the past through the first year. We were looking behind instead of ahead," said Herb Malany, chief regional forester for the Boise Cascade Corp. in Emmett.

Malany said he still believes existing management practices will preserve streams. The timber industry usually works on the upper end of the watershed and has experience in fighting erosion — unlike the towns and road crews downstream, he said.

Hydrologist Dale McGreer is a task force member who takes the historical view. And he agrees that resource managers must take a broader look in evaluating environmental impacts. They have to start looking at the cumulative effects of timbering and other land uses over time and not just any specific use at one point in time.

"If you take the action of the water and bank stability, unfortunately, they do interact when you get to the stream," he said. "It's going to take more analysis than Idaho to date provides."

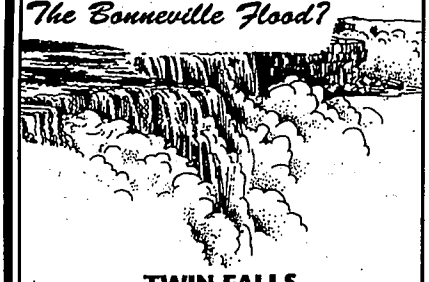

But after years of debate, the diverse group of volunteers is confident it has written a prescription for preserving Idaho's creeks.

"My gut feeling is 80-90 percent of time, you will be able to draw a valid conclusion," Malany said. "I think we've invented something that could be used across the nation."

And task force members predict the handbook could be extended to assessing streamside damage from farming or mining.

"We can criticize the science, but the question is if we will end up with a better environment," McGreer said. "The answer is yes. And can you do it without undue pain for landowners? And again, I believe it's yes."

Factory orders barely rise

Analysts debate nature of economic growth

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Factory orders for big-ticket goods barely increased in April, prompting debate among analysts over whether economic growth is slowing down.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that orders to U.S. factories for durable goods rose 0.1 percent last month, much less than most economists predicted.

But the department also revised upwards its figure for March, saying that orders advanced a healthy 0.7 percent instead of the earlier estimate of 0.4 percent.

The April advance was the eighth in the last nine months but the smallest since an outright decline of 1.8 percent during February's bitter chill. Even so, some analysts said manufacturing is still in good shape.

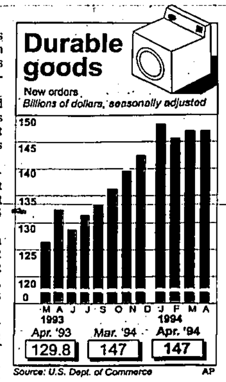

"The basic message is that the manufacturing sector still has considerable strength," said Robert Dederick, chief economist for the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "Autos are acting as a temporary drag. If we allow for that, it's still vigorous."

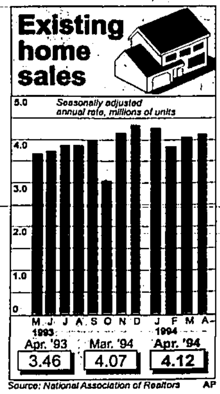

David Orr of First Union Corp. in Charlotte, N.C., agreed, noting that excluding volatile military and transportation orders, the indicator of manufacturing strength is well up over recent months.

"It's still so high that it's ludicrous to call it slow or soft in the usual sense of the word," he said.

But economist Robert Barr of U.S. Chamber of Commerce said the report is "another sign that the economy has shifted into lower gear."

Commerce Secretary Ron Brown said the Clinton administration is pleased with the figures. "Despite some volatility, the economy still demonstrates long-term strength," he said.

In another development, the National Association of Realtors reported that sales of existing homes rose 1.2 percent in April as buyers locked in mortgages amid fears that interest rates are headed even higher.

Sales were mixed regionally, posting healthy gains in the Midwest and West while declining slightly in the Northeast and South.

Durable-goods orders in April were held back mainly by weakness in transportation and metals, including steel, that are an important part of the transportation industry.

Orders for electronic and electrical equipment rose 8.6 percent in April, the fourth increase in the last five months.

The Commerce Department said all orders for durable goods, items expected to last at least three years, totaled a seasonally adjusted $147 billion, up from over $146.9 billion in March.

Orders for nondefense capital goods excluding aircraft — what many economists consider the truer test of underlying manufacturing strength — declined 0.7 percent in April after shooting up a revised 3.4 percent the previous month.

Report rates 8 states' tops in ability to bolster economy

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With Colorado leading the way, eight states made the latest annual honor roll for their ability to strengthen their economies and their potential for future growth, a private research group said Wednesday.

The Corporation for Enterprise Development said Colorado won A's in each of the three major categories — economic performance, business vitality and development capacity. The state also was the 1993 winner, with two A's and a B.

Others making the honor roll with at least two A's or B's and no grade lower than C were Delaware, Minnesota, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Utah, Virginia and Washington.

West Virginia ranked at the bottom of the class with all F's. Kentucky and Louisiana each flunked two of the three categories. California was one of four states that got F's in economic performance; Missouri, Kentucky and Louisiana were the others.

The nonprofit corporation, which is funded by businesses, labor unions and private foundations, defines economic performance as a measure of the benefits and opportunities a state's economy provides its populace.

Business vitality measures the dynamism of the state's business sector. Development capacity measures the state's capacity for future growth and recovery from economic adversity.

"In this eighth year of producing the Development Report Card for the States, it is once again clear that states with the best economic performance are those that invest in their people and physical environment and which have access to adequate fiscal and technical resources," said corporation president Brian Dabson.

The report noted that of the 11 states that received A's in development capacity in 1990, none received worse than a C in economic performance in 1994. Seven received A's and B's.

At the same time, it said, of the 10 worst-ranked states in 1990 development capacity, seven got D's or F's this year in economic performance.

Idaho ranks middle-of-road

The Associated Press

Idaho received a middle-of-the pack rating in the economic report card issued Wednesday.

The Corporation for Enterprise Development issued these ratings for the Gem State:

A for business vitality and dynamism.

C for development capacity, measuring the capacity for future growth and recovery from economic adversity.

Descriptions of economic performances of the nation's regions issued Wednesday by the Corporation for Enterprise Development:

NORTHEAST — The region's grades are mixed. Only four of 10 states (Connecticut, Delaware, New Hampshire and Vermont) receive A's or B's in economic performance, yet strong signs of new business vitality in some states show promise for the future. And, while Northeast jobs pay well and offer better benefits than others around the country — the legacy of the region's traditional strengths in high technology and human resources — the gap between the richest and poorest increased in every state.

MIDWEST — The "Comeback Kid" has five of its eight states improving this year by at least one grade in one or more indexes, and only one (Missouri) falling in economic performance. After a generation of decline and restructuring, the region is building off of its manufacturing base and the story doesn't just revolve around autos. There is a hint, however, that this area is offering fewer low-skill, entry-level jobs, as economic growth has been accompanied by an increase in income disparity.

PLAINS — The Plains states are split between the upper Plains, which show generally good unemployment rates and income distribution, and the lower Plains, which include Oklahoma and Texas with the nation's worst records of poverty and income disparity. Parts of the upper Plains have become a mecca for credit card processing, tourism and other services due to a good base of high school educated workers, low pay and low taxes. Meanwhile, Texas ranks as one of the most economically vital and diverse states in the region.

SOUTH — The job creation powerhouse is also the land of the working poor — it is still an area of poor education and low-wage branch industrial plants. While many Southern states rank near the bottom in measures of pay, health coverage, poverty and income distribution, pay growth measures show real progress, as does income disparity. The South is making slow improvements.

MOUNTAIN WEST — Although the recession and defense cuts have stalled the Mountain West this year, the region has been evolving toward the upper grades in the report card over the past five hears, aided by a good foundation of basic education and infrastructure and very high levels of entrepreneurship (half of the states received A's). Colorado and Utah do best in the report card overall with diverse economies with high-tech centers attracting a great deal of capital.

PACIFIC — With the exception of Hawaii, the Pacific is still feeling the affects of economic restructuring and low natural resource prices. It is no longer securely at the top of the report card, with California showing the most precipitous drop. Alaska and Hawaii, at the top, are tenuous due to the lack of diversity in their economies.

Bonds lead stocks to higher ground

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market followed the course plotted by bonds Wednesday and crept to higher ground in subdued trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished with a gain of 10.13 at 3,755.30 after spending much of the session at depressed levels. It was off about 19 points at its worst.

Market analysts were unimpressed with Wall Street's performance. Investors lacked compelling reasons to buy or sell so they merely mimicked action in the bond market, analysts said.

The numbers of stocks rising and falling on the New York Stock Exchange were fairly close with 1,115 up, 1,025 down and 670 unchanged. The trading pace eased and as of 4 p.m. on the Big Board's floor 254.42 million shares had changed hands, down from 279.87 million on Tuesday.

Bonds overcame a morning bout of weakness in the afternoon in a reversal that reflected relief that the Treasury's auction of five-year notes went better than traders anticipated.

Market analysts were puzzled by the bond market's morning slump given that a new government report suggested economic growth has eased.

Albertson's fines overturned

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The Oregon Court of Appeals Wednesday overturned more than $100,000 in child labor fines against Albertson's Inc. and ordered the state Bureau of Labor and Industries to hold a new hearing in the case.

The court said Labor Commissioner Mary Wendy Roberts did not follow bureau rules in imposing $128,750 in fines on the grocery chain.

The bureau in 1992 found the company guilty of 205 violations of failing to file employment certificates with the bureau within 48 hours of hiring minors, 51 counts of hiring minors without verifying their ages by asking to see work permits and one count of failing to provide records to the state.

A key issue in the appeal was Albertson's claim that it is regulated under the federal Fair Labor Standards Act, which under bureau rules could prevent the state from imposing fines on the company.

The bureau cited another rule saying employers are not regulated by the federal government if minor employees are in jobs exempt from the federal law or jobs over which federal agencies have taken no action.

But the appeals court said Roberts merely cited the rule without disclosing evidence of why Albertson's is not regulated by the federal law.

Opening lead: Club 10

Today's game was a shaky one at best. However, when South spotted a 2-1 shot at making game, all seemed to be blue sky. That was the good news. The bad news was that a 100 percent chance slipped away.

Dummy's club ace won and a heart went to South's king and West's ace. West punched South with another club, and South led a low diamond, West taking his ace. A third club lead forced South to ruff again, and South cashed dummy's king and queen of diamonds. When East's jack dropped, making dummy's 10 high, South saw a cinch 10 winners against any 3-2 trump break. He cashed the top trumps, but West's discard was the shocker. When South cashed his heart queen and ruffed a heart in dummy, East overruffed and led his high club, promoting his trump five to the setting trick.

South would have been better off had the diamond jack not dropped. He wouldn't have been tempted to go for the 3-2 trump break. To cinch the game after discarding a heart on a high diamond, he should not have played trumps at all. Instead, he cashes his heart queen and ruffs a heart in dummy. East overruffs and returns a trump, but South is safe. A high trump remains in dummy to ruff South's last heart, and South reels in 10 tricks.

Why settle for a good chance when a much better one goes unnoticed in the wings?

ANSWER: Three clubs. Works two ways. If North has a good hand, game might be on. If he has an average hand, you have pre-empted the enemy.

REQUEST FOR COMMENTS

USDA - Forest Service - Sawtooth National Forest Fairfield Ranger District, Elmore and Camas County, Idaho

South Fork Boise River-Timber Salvage Project

During the last several years some Douglas fir tree stands have been severely defoliated by a Douglas-fir tussock moth infestation on the Fairfield Ranger District, Sawtooth National Forest. Because of the severity of the defoliation in certain tree stands, the Forest has developed and analyzed three alternatives for a proposed dead tree salvage project, including a no action alternative. This analysis is documented in an Environment Assessment (EA), which is available for public review and comment.

The Forest Supervisor (who is the responsible official) has identified Alternative B as the preferred alternative. This alternative includes the possible salvage by helicopter logging of some of the dead trees on approximately 1450 acres of scattered stands that have been heavily defoliated by the Douglas-fir tussock moth and some additional trees that have been killed by the Douglas-fir bark beetle. About 1000 feet of new temporary road is needed to access a helicopter landing location. Existing roads provide all other access needed for the project.

Pursuant to 36 CFR 215.5, this legal notice provides a final opportunity to comment on the proposed timber salvage project.
